SUPREME CRISIS IN JAVA'S FATE NEAR AFTER BANDOENG'S RADIO BIDS GOODBYE

4 Die, 100 Hurt As Ammunition Truck Explodes

SMITHFIELD, N. C., March 7. (AP)—Like a gigantic time bomb which dealt death and destruction after attracting a crowd of the curious, a blazing truck and trailer loaded with 30,000 pounds of munitions exploded near here early today, killing at least four and injuring approximately 100.

The explosion occurred two hours after the truck was in a wreck with a sedan, three miles from here. Both vehicles caught fire.

Heard 50 Miles.

Wreckage was strewn for two and a half miles. A hole 30 feet deep and as long as a railroad car was ripped in the cement highway. Windows here were broken. A man standing half a mile away was seriously injured.

The blast was heard for 50 miles.

At first it was feared the death toll might reach seven or even higher. Coroner E. N. Booker announced at least three persons, in addition to the four known dead, perished in the wreckage of the hotel, which burned to the ground.

Later, however, Booker said all of the hotel occupants were accounted for. The ashes still were smoldering, and it was impossible to search the ruins.

The known dead were George Stroupe, of Gastonia, commander of a CCC camp at New Holland; Cecil E. Probst, of Lavandale, a state game and fish warden stationed at New Holland; Mrs. Minnie Lewis, of Raleigh, driver of the sedan which was in a wreck with the truck; and Buck Mitchell, 46, of Dunn, a cafe worker.

Spectators Wounded. The wreck occurred at about 1:30 o'clock in the morning at the junction of two U. S. highways.

Riding with Mrs. Lewis were her husband, their two children and two marines. All but one of the children were injured.

Immediately after the impact both vehicles started to burn. Fire departments from Smithfield and nearby towns battled the blaze for two hours. Crowds of spectators gathered. They were warned to keep back, but they didn't keep back far enough.

Stroupe and Probst were in a car which attempted to pass the blazing truck just when the explosion occurred. They were killed instantly.

Red Cross Rushes Aid To Blast Scene

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) Six Red Cross disaster relief workers left by plane today for Raleigh, N. C., to aid those injured in a munitions truck explosion at Smithfield. All of the national Red Cross staff, they will aid in hospitalizing the injured and help their families.

Four Soldiers Die In Barracks Blaze

CORVALLIS, Ore., March 7.—(AP)—Four soldiers died today in a fire in a temporary Army barracks here. Seven other men suffered burns.

The fire broke out about 6 a. m. and the frame building was a mass of flames when the Corvallis fire department arrived.

Military officials said origin of the fire was not yet determined.

Mrs. F.D.R. May Cancel Annual Easter Egg Roll

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt told her press conference today that, in view of stricter secret service regulations, the annual Easter Monday egg roll at the White House probably will not be held this year.

Who'll Disburse For Aged Hearse?

An opportunity the like of which you never saw before rears its macabre head in today's Want Ad pages of The Constitution. A party in Adairsville, believe it or not, offers for sale "a horse-drawn hearse, 75 or 85 years old." You can tell a horse's age by its teeth, but how about a hearse? Line serious on the right—as serious thinkers begin to compute mileage remaining in their tires.

MUNITIONS EXPLOSION—This widely scattered debris resulted when a truck and trailer loaded with 30,000 pounds of munitions exploded near Smithfield, N. C., yesterday, killing at least four and injuring approximately 100. At left is the wreckage of a roadside hotel which was demolished. The blast was heard for 50 miles.

Hurley Wants Action—Finds It WPB Orders End of Radio Manufacturing

WITH THE ALLIED FORCES IN THE SOUTHWEST PACIFIC, March 7.—(INS)—General Pat Hurley, recently appointed American minister to New Zealand and former secretary of war, was slightly wounded during a fierce Japanese bombing and strafing raid on the North Australian port of Darwin, he revealed today in an interview with this correspondent.

While traveling through the Pacific war zones, General Hurley had been complaining that he was always missing the excitement, arriving either too early or too late at this or that scene of action. But when he arrived in the heart of the vast southwest Pacific war theater, he finally got plenty of excitement—and a minor wound on the left shoulder, to boot.

(In addition to his formal role as minister to New Zealand, it was said in Washington that General Hurley has been entrusted by President Roosevelt with a "special mission" in the southwest Pacific.)

General Hurley's first two brushes with death in the Pacific war theater came while the general was flying from the embattled Dutch Indies island of Java aboard a bomber which was suddenly beset by a swarm of Jap fighters.

"It's a peculiar sensation," he told this writer, "to see guns blazing away in the air and to realize that they're aimed at you."

The American bomber's crew fended off the enemy fighters by acrobatic flying and effective shooting until fighters arose to protect General Hurley's plane and drove the Japs away.

By this time the general was satisfied he had had enough excitement to last a little while, but the Japs apparently were not of the same opinion. After arriving at Darwin in need of rest, General Hurley slept only a few hours and was having breakfast in his hotel room when the Japs hit again. Here's the way the general told of his experience in his own words:

"There was a blast and something whizzed into the room, spun my breakfast

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) The War Production Board today ordered manufacture of radios and phonographs for civilian use discontinued after April 22.

It also announced that, except for production of replacement parts, the entire facilities of the industry would be converted to war production.

Radio manufacturers will be permitted to complete sets on which assembly work was begun on or before April 22.

The order affects 55 companies which, last year, employed some 30,000 persons and produced more than 13,000,000 sets—a dollar volume of business approximating $240,000,000.

Speeding Auto Drags Woman, 28, To Death

Miss Alma Louise Gluth, 28, of 877 Edgewood avenue, was killed early yesterday morning near Smyrna in a freakish accident in which she apparently fell from an automobile traveling "100 miles an hour" and was dragged for several hundred feet along the highway, Cobb County Coroner J. R. Williams reported.

After an inquest yesterday, her companion and the driver of the car, L. N. Bailey, 31, of Atlanta, was being held without bond by Cobb county police on charges of murder and drunk driving.

According to evidence presented at the inquest, the door of the car in which Bailey and Miss Gluth were riding flew open as they were traveling toward Atlanta.

The woman fell against the door and Bailey grabbed her with his right arm to prevent her falling out, the jury was told. When he did so, he lost control of the car and it careened wildly for several hundred feet along the highway.

Miss Gluth was dragged alongside with Bailey still holding to her. Her body was mutilated.

Coroner Williams said the jury held Miss Gluth's death was from "an automobile accident beyond her control."

After the accident, Bailey left the woman's body in care of several witnesses and went to a nearby house and called Cobb county police, it was stated.

Surviving Miss Gluth are her parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. J. Gluth,

Fresh Enemy Forces Landed In Philippines

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) Evidence that the Japanese are meeting continuing resistance in the Philippines outside of beleaguered Bataan peninsula came today in a War Department communique which told of arrival of new enemy forces in the islands.

The report said enemy troops had landed at the town of Calapan, on the island of Mindoro, about 70 miles south of the entrance to Manila Bay. Significantly, the report mentioned that the troops were accompanied by tanks.

Refrigerators Ordered To February 2 Price

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) Price Administrator Leon Henderson issued a peremptory request today that "inflationary and unfair" price increases on mechanical refrigerators be rescinded immediately and that prices be restored to February 2 levels.

In telegrams to distributors, dealers and retail outlets, Henderson asserted that the sharp price increases had occurred on a nationwide scale since the War Production Board froze refrigerator stocks on February 14 preliminary to inaugurating a rationing plan.

VERONICA IS NO LAKE.

HAMILTON, N. Y., March 7.—(INS)—Colgate University students tonight picked Screen Actress Veronica Lake as honorary queen of their winter party, describing the petite blonde as "an ocean of emotion, not a lake."

Fulton County Plans Plane Plant Housing

Preliminary steps toward creating housing facilities in Fulton county, possibly in the Bolton section, for part of the 40,000 employees of the forthcoming Bell bomber plant at Marietta were taken yesterday with organization of the Fulton County Housing Authority.

The group, named three months ago, held its initial session at the call of Glen Hailey, acting chairman of the county commissioners, who emphasized the need for speedy action. M. V. Crowley was nominated for chairman and William L. McCalley Jr. was named as vice chairman. Crowley's appointment will be concurred in by the county commissioners, Hailey promised. This is a necessary legal formality. McCalley's selection was within the power of the housing authority itself.

No commitments were made by the board, and its first act was to determine to confer with the Atlanta Housing Authority, Bell Company officials and Army officers about a definite program. It was declared that the bomber factory situation was merely a typical problem to solve which the authority was created. Its statutory functions are to investigate and improve housing conditions wherever necessary in the county, outside any incorporated community.

"Unless this impending great need for housing in the bomber factory region is met, at least in part, by action on our part, we are going to experience a great exodus from Fulton county," Hailey told the three authority members present. "By establishing housing in Fulton county near the factory, it will be possible also to create a shuttle transportation service."

Red Consulate Surrounded by Turkish Police

ANKARA, March 7.—(INS)—Two members of the Soviet commercial mission in Ankara have been arrested and the Russian consulate general building at Istanbul has been surrounded by Turkish police in connection with the recent bombing attempt against German Ambassador Colonel Franz von Papen, the Turkish government announced tonight.

An official Turkish announcement quoted the arrested men as allegedly having confessed that another plot had been laid in Sofia to assassinate German Foreign Minister Joachim von Ribbentrop, should he visit the Bulgarian capital.

Endangering the possibility of a diplomatic crisis between Russia and Turkey, an official communique said Turkish police had thrown a cordon around the Soviet consulate general in the Istanbul suburb of Pera at midnight Thursday and had delivered an "ultimatum" to the Soviet officials there.

The "ultimatum" it was stated, demanded the delivery to the police of a suspect who had taken refuge in the consulate general by midnight Saturday and threatened that "action would be taken" if such delivery were not made. The suspect who "fled" to the Soviet consular premises was detained.

Requiem for Java

Following is the final message received by the New York office of Aneta, Netherlands Indies news agency, from its Bandoeng correspondent. A review of the last phases of the campaign in western Java, Aneta said it obviously was written in anticipation of the grave events which followed.

By J. B. BOUWER.

Aneta Staff Correspondent.

BANDOENG, Java, March 7 (10 a. m. Java time)—(Aneta to AP)—The situation on Java, at least on the western part of the island, has now become critical. The Japanese—again attacking with great superiority—have broken through the defenses on the north side of the well-known volcano of Tangkoeban Praho.

This happened Friday, after desperate resistance from Netherlands Indies troops which were not only numerically far inferior but were moreover harassed by the Japanese air force against which the Dutchmen can no longer put up sufficient resistance.

Scene of Tragedy.

The tragedy now being enacted in the previously peaceful valleys north of the famous crater—well-known to hundreds abroad for its beauty—becomes heart-rending when one recalls that a great part of the Dutch air force was lost in the unavailing defense of Malaya.

In the Netherlands Indies there has been criticism of the Allies in Malaya and Singapore. Judgment will be softer now that Dutchmen are fighting in the same circumstances as did the Allies in Malaya.

Circumstances here, however, are still more unfavorable, as the Japanese superiority is probably not less than five to one—to say nothing about air superiority. In the air the Japanese have absolute mastery.

When on December 8—Java time—Japan declared war on the United States and Great Britain, the Netherlands Indies immediately threw in its forces in the air and on the sea in support of the cause of it Allies, and this in the aggressive way which has been praised so much by the public opinion of all countries which fight against tyranny.

Quick Exhaustion.

This policy was one which risked the quick exhaustion of our forces but this risk was taken in the expectation that reinforcements would soon arrive in the Far East. Agreements which made this likely had actually been concluded.

The establishment of the Allied command on Java offered, moreover, the moral certainty that the utmost would be done to make Java the base whence the Allied offensive could start in case Malaya and Singapore could not be held.

In connection with this, Java was transformed into a base for large concentrations.

The Netherlands Indies forces were not large, but it was believed that if the enemy could be stopped before he reached the coasts of Java the necessary reinforcements could be made available.

During January the outer provinces were gradually lost, but against that fact stood the expectation that during the first half of February sufficient reinforcements would reach Java to make it virtually certain that this main island of the Indies could be held and that thereafter the initiative could be taken.

They Never Came.

These reinforcements never came. Indeed, the Allied troops in Java are small in number.

They fight alongside the Dutch and Indonesian soldiers with spirit, but they are unable to turn the tide.

While the fleet and air force in offensive action scored great successes, at the same time they paid for these successes very heavily.

Reinforcements became difficult. Planes arrived, especially heavy United States bombers.

Guerrilla War Opens as Dutch Abandon Hope

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.

A hint that the seven-day-old battle of Java may have reached a supreme crisis came last night when the official Java radio announced: "We are shutting down now. Good-bye till better times. Long live the Queen!"

The dramatic broadcast followed 13-hour-old dispatches from Bandoeng, Allied military headquarters in Java, reporting that Japanese troops were storming at the gates of Bandoeng and had already broken through the city's northern defenses.

The official Java radio station is located at Bandoeng, and its signing off may have meant that the Allies were preparing to abandon the city or that Japanese troops had forced its surrender.

News Awaited.

Dutch quarters in London said they hoped to hear further news of the climactic struggle from small secret transmitting stations in the heart of Java, just strong enough to be picked up in Australia, but that "so far we haven't received a word from these stations."

A Tokyo radio broadcast asserted that collapse of the entire defense of Java, the last United Nations citadel north of Australia, was regarded "as a matter of a few days."

Founded by a Japanese air force against which "Dutchmen can no longer put up sufficient resistance," the defenders of the beautiful glens of volcanic Mount Tangkoeban Praho, 10 miles north of Bandoeng, finally gave way on Friday, said a dispatch of Aneta, the Dutch news agency.

As a result, the dispatch said, the situation on the whole western end of the island, which had been reckoned as the best defended, was admittedly critical after only seven days of the invasion.

The interruption of further communication suggested that perhaps the Dutch hopes of making a MacArthur-like stand amid the high hills of west central Java had been completely dashed.

Text of Dispatch.

The complete dispatch follows: "Bandoeng, March 7, 10 A. M. Java Time (Delayed)—Japanese troops have broken through Bandoeng's northern defenses, it became known this morning.

"The situation on at least the western part of the island of Java is now admittedly 'critical'.

"The breach occurred Friday in the lines on the northern side of the famous volcano of Tangkoeban Praho.

"The defenses here constituted the first line of Bandoeng's mountain defenses to the north.

"The Japanese break-through took place in the face of fierce resistance on the part of the far numerically inferior Netherlands Indies troops.

"The defenses here constituted harassed by the Japanese air force, against which, it was stated, Dutchmen can no longer put up sufficient resistance.

"The Japanese were described as again attacking with great superiority.

"The action took place in an area which has long been a mecca of tourists. The mountain glens on the northern slopes of Tangkoeban Praho are world-famous for their beauty."

The mountain is about 6,000 feet high.

Axis Claims.

To this only was added the usual claims of Axis sources, some of which, particularly those from Germany, may have outrun the actual events.

One Berlin broadcast of Tokyo dispatches said the Japanese already had entered Bandoeng, but a subsequent broadcast said only that Japanese armored units had passed through Lembang, five miles north of Bandoeng, and about the same distance south of Tangkoeban Praho.

Bandoeng was being continually bombed, the Germans said, and great Japanese activity was reported in the area of Poerwakarta, 25 miles southwest, as the Japanese attacked toward the line of communications between Japanese-occupied Batavia and the military base of Bandoeng.

Troops retreating from Batavia, which had been abandoned as the Probable Rains, Warmer Forecast

Warmer, breezier weather is forecast for Atlanta today with the possibility of showers, the municipal airport office of the Weather Bureau announced yesterday. The weatherman said that although temperatures will be higher there will be some wind and perhaps showers in the morning. The mercury yesterday ranged between 36 and 65 degrees.

Evicted Pair Here Improvises Crude Tent on Vacant Lot

This story really needs the pen of a John Steinbeck. It concerns an Atlanta couple and their four daughters. The girls spent Friday night at the juvenile detention home. The parents spent the night in an improvised tent on a lot on Hills avenue.

The couple, Walter Murrow and his wife, Ella, both on the far side of middle age, weren't bitter as they told a Constitution reporter how the processes of law—due to their lack of rent money—sent them out of their four-room house and on to the adjacent vacant lot, where they used three quilts and a sheet to form a sort of box-like shelter open to the sky.

Murrow said nothing was needed over the top of the "tent," since the wind wasn't coming straight down. But after darkness came, the quilts and the sheets became soggy with dampness. It was possible to squeeze water out of them.

Ground Is Damp. Murrow said the ground did not make a good floor, because it was cold and damp from melted snow. But Murrow pointed out what a fine fire he had, glowing coals in a grate he had made from a piece of old wash tub. The coal on top burned with a fine, almost white flame, and the fire did not make much smoke.

Yet, being out in the open, it was necessary to get close to the fire to keep warm, even if it was a good fire.

Murrow picked up a lantern from a straw-bottomed chair when the reporter and an acquaintance of the Murrows, who had called the newspaper's attention to the plight of the family, handed her the lantern, "take this and put it in the corner to give these folks some place to set."

He himself moved from a chair and sat on the edge of the bed.

Troubles Come. Murrow said his troubles came late last fall when he lost his WPA job. He said they later gave him another assignment, but that he could not find it, and so had to wait for a new one.

He said he couldn't pay his landlady when he couldn't get work. The rent was $20 for the four-room house. Last Saturday marked the end of the three-day grace period. But the weather was bad that day, and the officers did not evict him.

Nor did they evict him when snow came Monday, and the weather remained bad Friday night, though, the family was evicted.

Through the help of his acquaintance, Murrow sent the four girls to the detention home. Lillie Margaret is 16, Lena is 15 and Rosetta is 14. The baby is Ruby Lee, eight years old.

Murrow doesn't think he'll be able to get much help from his relatives. He says he doesn't have any close kin, "only second and third cousins." He said he had two married daughters.

Of one of his sons-in-law he said, "He ain't stout." Of the other, he shook his head.

Hope for Fair Weather. As Murrow's acquaintance and the reporter with him left Murrow's fire, some one expressed the hope that it would not rain so the things out in the open would not be ruined.

Murrow surveyed his worldly possessions—tables, a few chairs, a stove, a couple of trunks, beds, a few cooking utensils, lamps, and a cabinet—and said, "the things I have the rain can't hurt."

This acquaintance of Murrow's talked about him:

"Murrow," he said, "is a good man. He don't drink whisky. He works good and he's honest. Course, he can't do everything, but he's a good, ordinary laborer and can paint and do rough carpenter work. He can't read or write and he don't have much business sense. I believe that's his trouble, he's had no schooling."

From Hills avenue you could see Walter Murrow standing before his fire. You could see a silhouette of him from his shoulders up, and Ella Murrow sitting down, to get some protection from the quilts and because she was tired.

Constitution Want Ads are go-getters for speedy merchandising results.

A LOT BECOMES HOME—Walter Murrow and his wife, Ella, sit among their few possessions, in a box-like shelter made of three quilts and a sheet. Friday night the couple and their four young daughters were evicted from their home because they could not pay the rent. But the Murrows expressed no bitterness at their circumstances.

J. H. Johnson, Pioneer News Editor, Is Dead

Atlantan Was Widely Known in New York, Hollywood.

Joseph H. Johnson, 71, an Atlanta newspaperman during the '90s and for many years prominent in politics in New York city, died yesterday at his residence, 2214 Peachtree road.

A native of Griffin, he spent most of his early life in Georgia. He was city editor of the Atlanta Journal and one of the south's best known newspapermen just before the turn of the century. He wrote a column in that newspaper, entitled, "Done, Seen and Heard," for many years.

In 1898 he went to New York city to join the staff of the New York Journal when William Randolph Hearst was beginning his newspaper career. He soon became prominent in politics, organizing the "Order of Acorns," a political group.

He managed McCall's majority campaign and later was fire commissioner of the city for six years and commissioner of public works under Mayor William Gaynor for four years.

Afterward he went to Hollywood and became engaged in the motion picture business as an executive with 20th Century-Fox, remaining there until about five years ago, when he returned to Atlanta.

Surviving are his wife; three daughters, Mrs. Harriet Hagerty, of New York; Mrs. Hobart Newman, of Washington, D. C.; and Mrs. Josephine Tilling, of Los Angeles, Cal.; and two sisters, Mrs. Hamilton Stenerson, of New York, and Mrs. Bessie Sloan, of Atlanta. H. M. Patterson & Son will announce funeral plans.

MARINE TRANSFERRED. MILLEDGEVILLE, Ga., March 7.—William Levere Switzer, of Milledgeville, who enlisted in the United States Marine Corps at Macon, has been transferred to Parris Island for recruit training. He is the son of Mr. and Mrs. A. W. Switzer.

scribed officially as an "accomplice" of a Turkish citizen, formerly a Yugoslav, who was blown to bits by explosion of a bomb he was alleged to be carrying just as he was leaving Colonel and Madame von Papen on an Ankara street on February 24.

The incident was termed by the Turkish government the result of an unsuccessful "Communist" plot to assassinate Von Papen and it was announced that several "Communists" already have been arrested as purported accomplices.

All-Night Party.

On Thursday evening, the communique related, some 60 or 70 guests had assembled in the Soviet consulate general outside Istanbul to view a Russian film. The guests, mostly Turks, started to leave towards midnight when they were stopped by Istanbul police and told they had to remain. They spent the night in the consular headquarters, but were permitted to leave at 7 o'clock Friday morning.

By that time the cordon had been thrown around the building and the police had served the "ultimatum" expiring Saturday midnight.

Meanwhile, the authorities in Ankara placed the two members of the Soviet commercial mission under arrest, but it was stated that they were not "on the diplomatic list" and were therefore comparatively minor members. One was described as an interpreter for the mission and the other a Mohammedan who served as the delegation's receptionist.

Political circles in Ankara predicted that the Turkish government may close down the Soviet consulate general at Istanbul and request Russia to withdraw its commercial mission from Ankara.

Two Incidents Indicate Sub Activity at Panama

BALBOA, Canal Zone, March 7.

Two incidents possibly indicating submarine activity in waters near the Panama Canal were disclosed today by the commandant of the 15th United States Naval District.

In a press conference review of recent developments, he said United States warships immediately loosed a full attack against supposed underwater craft but that the presence of submarines never had been proven definitely.

Army Journal Sees Elevation Of MacArthur

Talks of Possibility He May Direct War in Pacific.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(INS)—The possibility that General Douglas MacArthur, defender of the Philippines, will become the supreme commander of United Nations operations in the southwest Pacific was commented upon tonight by the Army and Navy Journal.

White House conferences to map the new strategy in the Pacific war theater following the loss of the Dutch Indies have been conducted not only with plans for checking the Japanese, the Journal intimated, but have included discussion of the personnel of the new high command.

"It is stated," the Journal said, "that a new joint plan for a form of common action has been drawn up, and is being perfected at White House conferences and in the several capitals of the other Allied nations."

Issuing from this discussion is the report that General MacArthur is to be offered the supreme command of future operations in the southwest Pacific and areas contiguous to China and India and Burma.

"It is pointed out that the general, who has conducted such a magnificent defense on the Bataan peninsula, would inspire all the United Nations to greater resistance, and that the Filipino people would feel that he had not abandoned them, since their archipelago would be included in his command."

"It will be remembered that Prime Minister Churchill conveyed the thanks of parliament to him for the great contribution he had made to the Allied cause. That the statesmen of Australia had lauded him, and asked that he be placed in command of their defense, and that a strong group in congress has gone so far as to urge that he be brought home and given supreme command of our operations everywhere."

Man Here Stabbed During Noon Rush

A Negro man was stabbed to death during the midday rush in front of the Ivy street entrance to Belle Isle's garage in an argument over a debt, police reported yesterday.

The victim was listed as Clifford Henderson, 32, of 72 1-2 Fort street, N. E. Two white men are being sought in connection with the case, police said. Witnesses told police the Negro and two men engaged in heated words, apparently over a debt owed by the Negro.

Henderson was stabbed in the right arm and chest. He was pronounced dead upon arrival at Grady hospital.

Income Gain Is Reported For Georgians

Per Capita Sum Rose From $185 in 1933 to $321 in 1940.

ATHENS, Ga., March 7.—(AP)—The per capita income in Georgia rose from $185 in 1933 to $321 in 1940, the Bureau of Business Research of the University of Georgia, said in its monthly business review.

This is the nearest approach thus far to the high level of $330 per capita attained in 1929.

A sharp rise in the amount of life insurance sales marked the start of 1942. January sales amounted to $13,922,000, a gain of 85.2 per cent over the same month in 1941 and a gain of 10.8 per cent over the preceding month.

Business failures in the state during January, 1942, numbered 24, contrasted with eight for January a year ago.

Only 23,810 persons were on WPA rolls in the state in January this year, compared with 42,091 in January 1941, a decrease of 43.5 per cent.

Cancer Deaths High, Reports Mrs. Ritchie

Number in U. S. Last Year Said More Than War Fatalities.

NEW YORK, March 7.—(AP)—Cancer fatalities in the United States last year totaled more than the number of men lost in battle by six nations, members of the executive committee of the Women's Field Army for Control of Cancer were told here today.

Mrs. H. B. Ritchie, of Athens, Ga., a deputy national commander of the organization, presented a chart showing that whereas Great Britain, Rumania, Finland, Greece, Yugoslavia and Italy lost 155,000 soldiers in battle, the losses in the United States alone from cancer totaled 158,000.

"If cancer is detected soon enough it can be cured," Mrs. Ritchie said. "We must work toward that end," she said, "as a means of protecting not only our fighting forces from the disease, but the millions of men and women behind the lines in civilian defense and as auxiliaries of the combat units."

"Delay in treatment must be geared up everywhere in the land. When as many persons die from cancer as die in battle cancer becomes a grave interference with our march to victory."

The meeting of the executive committee of the W. S. C. C. was called for the purpose of mapping plans for combating "this menace to the nation's unlimited war effort."

That Big Snow Was Bad News for the Axis as Well as for Courageous Linemen

Men Who Risk Life Itself Keep Our Irons and Toasters Going

By DUPONT WRIGHT.

The wind howls... snow drives thicker and thicker... temperature drops, and electric cables sag under the weight of enveloping ice, but the solitary linemen trudge doggedly across-country under the singing wires.

Somewhere there has been a break, and people, say in Lawrenceville, or Dahlonega, or Gainesville, have become acutely aware of what electric current means to them. In the affected spots, the whole standard of modern life has been thrown out of balance.

A fellow can't phone his girl to tell her the road is blocked and he can't reach her. More urgent communications are likewise out. Train dispatchers have to exercise ingenuity in routing instructions to keep the trains going. Industrial plants come to a pause, trafley cars stall. A thousand necessary gadgets are silenced.

When their steady drone will resume rests on the rugged shoulders of the linemen—say his name is Bill Wise—mushing cross-country, often waist-high in drifts, through the driving wet. The dispatcher, testing his lines at headquarters, has located the failure somewhere between switches that may be 15 to 50 miles apart. Bill Wise, or one of his fellows, on foot, must find the exact spot.

Perhaps Bill is an ordinary lineman, one of a picked lot, or he may be a young graduate just out of Tech or Auburn, learning the power business in all its multiple phases. Anyway, while his endurance lasts, he will not fail the restless, waiting people the light of whose civilization temporarily has been blacked out.

Bill and his fellows did not fail during last Monday's snowstorm, which taxed the human energies of the Georgia Power and Bell Telephone companies to maintain or restore service in north Georgia threatened or crippled by it.

Bill knew the break was somewhere near Rome and that some towns were clamoring for current. Most of the Rome division of the power company remained unaffected by the break, for automatic switches had, when one line failed, immediately brought in current from Alabama, or the TVA.

Hungry and cold, snowblind, Bill mashes on. Perhaps he comes to a highway where there has been a serious wreck. People have been hurt. Bill knows first aid and lends a hand. Although no such cases were reported during the last snowstorm, there have been many such. Both power company and telephone linemen are skilled in first aid.

He presses on and at length locates the break, at the top, say, of an 80-foot, itself on an exposed hill. Well, the search is over, but the worst is ahead. Sometimes, Bill has to backtrack for help, but if he can he hitches his phone to a live wire and give the location to the dispatcher, who, in turn, notifies the nearest crew.

As Risky as Signal Corps in Java!

Equipped with wire, the crew starts out, taking Bill hot coffee and food. The dispatcher already has pulled the switch on that line and attached a card to it. No one may close it without instructions from Bill Wise himself.

Sometimes Bill, with his emergency kit, thinks he can do the repair job alone. Picture him shinning up that 80-foot pole, slippery as grease, exposed to the north wind's penetrating blasts. Maybe he has not slept for 24 hours.

He could not be in a more uncomfortable, or riskier position if he were in the Signal Corps in Java. But he does his job, and people far distant who never heard of him, suddenly see their lights go on and the even tenor of their way restored.

The little snug saga of Bill Wise was that of scores of others, telephone, telegraph and railroad

On the Job Before Blow Fell

A graduate of Auburn, he has been a lineman himself, a veteran of snowstorms, cyclones and other emergencies that cause breaks in the elaborate grid that supplies electric current all over the state, a grid composed of 8,900 miles of distribution lines and 3,400 miles of transmission lines.

When he saw the snow last Monday, McManus knew trouble was on the way. He checked the falling thermometer and made a wish it would stop somewhere above the freezing point, for ice coating on wires increases their weight to the breaking point.

He immediately checked on locations of all his operating and construction crews and instructed them to stand by. He sent two from Atlanta to Cartersville, one from Macon to Gainesville, two from Columbus to Carrollton, one from Augusta to Athens. Each crew consists of a foreman and seven or eight men.

He soon found the company's own telephone system had suffered breaks, as well as that of the Southern Bell. Calls to Rome had to be routed via Chattanooga.

McManus' job was to get extra help where it was needed. After that it was up to the division superintendents, engineers and linemen. To them he gives credit for the quick restoration of interrupted services. During the storm, the power company had 300 men working in Atlanta repairing breaks mainly caused by falling trees, but fortunately there was no freeze here to add to their difficulties.

It had more than 200 breaks in the Rome and 160 in the Athens division.

It cost money to keep wires humming with power, and the storm added an extra burden, but, according to McManus, last week's weather paid for itself. He has to worry every day about the amount of water in the company's

At 8-Miles-in-40-Hours Pace

The telephone company generates its own power and the principal damage to the system's wires during the storm was at points on long-distance lines near Rome, Cedartown, Rockmart, Dawsonville, Cartersville, Acworth, and Gainesville. To these areas, about 150 repairmen quickly were dispatched from areas not affected.

Telephone lines, unlike power lines, generally follow main-travelled roads, but sometimes they, too, run cross-country.

When the level goes down, industry must reduce production, perhaps the delivery of a bomb to the Japanese or Germans is delayed.

He figures the storm, with all its trouble, brought the company between 5,000,000 and 10,000,000 additional kilowatt hours of electricity. So the tempest speeded, rather than retarded, the avalanche of destruction gathering to descend on the Axis.

One repair crew of five men, seeking a break near Rockmart, found road conditions so bad it was only able to go eight miles in 40 hours. Near Acworth, its progress was blocked by 300 stalled automobiles and busses and the crew continued on its way by a circuitous route.

By such efforts telephone crews were able to put all broken long-distance lines back into operation within 24 hours.

Georgia NYA Work Will Be Cut 10 Per Cent*Groups Aiding Defense Will Not Be Affected, Barker Says.

About 10 per cent of NYA activities in Georgia will be eliminated by an order, national in scope, issued yesterday in Washington by Administrator Aubrey Williams banning any non-war programs.

It was estimated by C. H. Barker, Georgia NYA director of projects, that 90 per cent of the existing effort of 125 units, employing 5,000 boys and girls, was devoted to national defense and would not be affected by Williams' edict. Projects ordered dropped by Williams were handicraft activities, research, statistical and survey assistance, library service, recreational assistance, nursery school assistance, institutional service, curb-marking, highway landscaping, roadside improvements, construction of trails and improvement of grounds around public buildings and construction, repair and remodeling of recreational facilities.

Move Anticipated.

"We have been revising our program for three or four months in anticipation of this situation," Barker declared, speaking in the absence from the state of Boisfeuillet Jones, Georgia administrator. "Those projects which have not already been adapted to the war program will be changed over promptly."

Similar action by the Georgia CCC forces, under way for many months, was further advanced by abandonment of five camps at Suches, Soperton, LaFayette, Marietta and Gainesville, and transfer of the personnel to Camp Van Horn at Fort Benning, now wholly devoted to war work.

An official declaration of the regional headquarters last week pointed out that, if all existing requests from the Army for CCC assistance were met, it would be necessary to increase instead of decrease the number of CCC enrollees now in Georgia.

Williams estimated 35,000 youths, nationally, would be dropped from the rolls, but Barker said in Georgia most NYA enrollees were engaged in construction work and shop operation, and listed as examples sheet metal work, machine shop units, welding, forging, foundry, pattern-making, wood-working and radio and electrical work.

Girls' units have been assigned to power sewing, food preparation and preservation and hospital aid. A few of the Georgia units are in operation at Army posts, where enrollees assist in shops and at clerical assignments. Others are doing similar work for selective service offices.

In a statement last week Administrator Jones pointed to the large volume of workers trained for manufacture of war materials and for definite military service.

DUTCH IN ENGLAND. LONDON, March 7.—(AP)—A detachment of Dutch volunteers and conscript troops has arrived in England from South Africa for service with the Netherlands armed forces, Aneta, Dutch news agency, reported today.LABOR AND DEFENSE—Donald M. Nelson (center), War Production Board chairman, discussed labor problems yesterday with William Green (left), AFL president, and Philip Murray, CIO chief. The conference preceded Nelson's statement that "I have not recognized" any possibility that shipbuilding might fall short.Nelson Holds Harmonious Talk With Green and Murray

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) this year might not be realized, Nelson retorted.

Chairman Donald M. Nelson, of the War Production Board, declared today that "I have not recognized" any possibility that the war shipbuilding program might fall short of President Roosevelt's goal.

On the contrary, Nelson told reporters, "we're trying to increase the program."

Asked to comment on a statement yesterday by W. H. Harrison, WPB production director, that the President's "blueprint for victory" goal of 8,000,000 tons of shipping much the shipbuilding might be expanded.

He held the press conference a few minutes after a meeting with Philip Murray, CIO president, and William Green, AFL president, which lasted an hour and twenty minutes.

Nelson said both labor leaders pledged "wholehearted support of all branches of labor" in carrying out his request for an immediate 25 per cent increase in production with existing facilities. The production chief said he talked over "the whole subject of industry-labor committees" with Murray and Green and that the conference proceeded "completely harmoniously and co-operatively."

"I am convinced that out of the whole thing will come increased production," Nelson declared, adding that both Murray and Green "realize the necessity for increased production now—in 1942."

Leaving the conference, Green described it as "very satisfactory" and Murray declared that "we pledged the utmost co-operation."

MEN! LET'S FACE FACTS!

Those of us who are not going to be immediately called into the Service must keep the home fires burning and do our jobs. One of the sacrifices we will have to make is to wear substitutes for all-wool clothing when the time comes, to keep the boys warm who are making it hot for Hitler.

According to the War Production Board in an Associated Press dispatch of February 25th, "wool allocations will be reduced for civilian orders during the next quarter (April, May, June) to 20% of the amount used for worsted cloth during the comparable period last year, and 10% of the amount used for woolsens."

We aren't trying to scare you into buying—we have a complete stock of wool clothing in all sizes at the present time—but we do feel that, in all honesty, we should tell you the facts, then it's up to you to use your own judgment.

Attempt To Slash Soil Conservation Allotment Rejected

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP)—The house rejected today an attempt to pare $10,865,744 from the Soil Conservation Service's allotment in the $695,000,000 agriculture appropriations bill. The vote, by tellers, was 108 to 88.

Representative Dirksen, Republican, Illinois, sponsor of the amendments, declared the Soil Conservation Service maintained a personnel of 14,534—which he said was "equivalent" to two Army divisions—and that the savings he proposed would buy 120 bombers or 150 medium tanks.

He emphasized the proposed cut had nothing to do with soil conservation payments, that it would reduce only the service's experimental work in soil and moisture conservation.

"Our first and foremost job is not soil conservation; it is the job of conserving the nation," declared Dirksen.

But Representative Tarver, Democrat, Georgia, in charge of the bill, argued the service was essential, adding it soil depletion continued for the next 200 years at the rate of the past 200 years "the United States will become as barren as the Sahara desert."

From Representative Woodrum, Democrat, Virginia, came a plea for even greater economies as he shouted congress soon would pass a tax bill that will "erode the pockets of all Americans."

Representative Leavy, Democrat, Washington, said Dirksen's amendments would "destroy the entire program" and argue 45 states had set up bureaus dependent upon the service's direction.

The house eliminated a $400,000 allotment for compilation of farm labor statistics as it began its fourth day of debate.

A few minutes later, the house made its first boost in the bill, adding $202,340 for tobacco inspection and statistics.

Atlantans Urged To Conserve Fuel

Atlantans should adopt every useful method for conserving fuel which is becoming increasingly scarce because of the national emergency, W. E. Tidmore, of the Atlanta Smoke Abatement Bureau, warned yesterday.

A few simple rules for conservation were suggested by Tidmore as follows:

1. See that your furnace or boiler is of the correct size for the job and that it is in the best possible condition.

2. Use the best kind and size of fuel for your plant and see that it is fired, mechanically if possible, in the most economical manner.

3. Prevent ignorant or careless operation of equipment.

Tidmore pointed out that inspections already made in Atlanta show that more than 90 per cent of the plants are in need of repairs in order to give their best service, and that 50 per cent of them are in a serious condition.

Episcopalians Of 15 Dioceses To Meet Here

Church Leaders To Discuss Christian Social Relations.

Delegates from the 15 Episcopal dioceses in the nine southern states will meet in Atlanta Wednesday and Thursday to attend the Fourth Province's Department of Christian Social Relations meeting.

Bishop William Mercer Green, of Mississippi, will preside at the meeting which will bring a large number of outstanding church speakers to Atlanta. Bishop R. E. Gribbin, formerly assistant rector at St. Luke's church, now bishop of Western North Carolina and chaplain of the 105th Medical Regiment at Fort Jackson, will speak on "The Program of the Church in Camp Communities and Industrial Defense Areas." The meeting will be held at the Biltmore hotel.

Other speakers will include the Rev. Almon R. Pepper, executive secretary of the department of social relations for the national church; Miss Dorothy Stabler, Bishop Arthur R. McKinstry, of Delaware; Bishop Middleton S. Barnwell, Mrs. J. D. Ames, of the Inter-racial Committee of Atlanta, and the Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, assistant secretary of the Department of Domestic Missions for the national council.

Bollinger Heads East Lake Club

Faber Bollinger, Atlanta businessman, was elected president of the East Lake Civic Club at its annual meeting Friday night.

Other officers elected were E. J. Clower, first vice president; George R. Bollinger, second vice president; E. D. Jones, secretary; R. E. Lee Field, treasurer; F. R. Adams, sergeant-at-arms; Rev. F. L. Squires, chaplain. They will assume office in April.

"The club will continue its present activities for the betterment of the East Lake section," Bollinger said yesterday, "and probably undertake new ones. It is especially interested in bringing about the erection of a real building for the Murphy Junior High school, which is now housed in flimsy wooden shacks."

WINGATE SPEAKS. HAWKINSVILLE, Ga., March 7. H. L. Wingate, president of the Georgia Farm Bureau, spoke to the Pulaski County Farm Bureau Friday.

'Bundles' Unit Opens Branch Offices Here

Group To Collect Sunday Gifts for Men in Service.

Atlanta branch offices of Bundles for America, an organization designed to provide for American service men the necessities not furnished by the government, were opened yesterday at 37 Peachtree Arcade, on the low level near Broad street. The telephone is Walnut 7952.

Mrs. Willard Patterson has been chosen chairman of the branch. Mrs. Nell Ingersoll is secretary. Bundles for America was organized after the plan of the Bundles for Britain movement following the United States entry into the war. The needs of American soldiers, sailors and marines were considered foremost. Mrs. Wales Latham, of New York, was the founder and is national president.

"Salvage for Defense" is the first objective of the organization just now.

"We are concentrating on the merchant marine," said Mrs. Patterson. "These men are not in uniform. In case of disaster at sea they are in great distress. For them we need men's suits and overcoats and shoes that can be reconditioned."

"Sixteen 'day rooms' have been set off at the end of the barracks at Fort McPherson, for recreation purposes, but there is no appropriation for equipping them. We ask the public for sturdy furniture, radio sets, phonographs, table tennis tables. Reading matter, informative but light, will be welcomed."

For the Navy, Mrs. Patterson said, the need is for comfort kits, containing various little toilet articles, from tooth paste to shaving cream.

German Pilot Joins Up With Reds, Report Says

MOSCOW, March 7.—(AP)—Front dispatches reported today that Lieutenant Herbert Baumgartner, of the 27th squadron of the German air force, has deserted from his command and joined the Soviet army in the Crimea with his Heinkel III.

(A German flyer holding a lieutenant's rank named Herbert Baumgartner was formerly one of Field Marshal Herman Goering's private pilots. He had been decorated several times for bravery in aerial attacks against Poland, England and Russia and held the highly prized diamond iron cross.)

tray around and messed up everything. I leaped into my shirt and pants and ran out into the hallway when I realized I was bareheaded.

Ran Back for Cap. "Thinking it undignified for a general to be bareheaded, I ran back, got my cap and started down the hallway again when another one hit. I went skidding on my face and tumbled down the stairs out into the street.

"I looked everywhere and not a soul was in sight. There was nothing but buzzing Jap planes and plenty of bombs. It's an empty feeling—having no friends.

"Down the street came the planes, machinegunning. I ran and dove into the dirt alongside a house on the side which was away from the direction the Japs were coming. But when they got up to the end of the street, they turned around and came back. And there I was in plain view and feeling mighty silly.

"But they missed me and I started to run across the street toward a big park when another bomb hit right in back of me. It sent me rolling and over my appetite.

Kept Running. "But I got up and continued running until I came to a big tree under which the flyers couldn't see me.

"Then a strange thing happened. A bomb blast swept over me and I looked up and there was once more a leaf on that tree. I was once more all alone and in plain view.

"Then an Australian came up and said, 'General, would you like me to show you the way to a shelter?' I said I certainly would be much obliged and he did.

"Somebody wanted to know how blood got on my arm and I realized for the first time that I had been hit a little bit in the left shoulder. It was then bandaged and I'm all well now. It was nothing serious at all.

"While waiting for transportation to another field, I went over to a park and went to sleep. "Never again will I say I am looking for excitement. The Japs furnished plenty."

1941 Income Sets New Peak At 94 Billions

National Intake Is 22 Per Cent Higher Than in 1940.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) The Commerce Department figured today the national income reached a new peak of $94,500,000,000 last year — 22 per cent more than 1940 and 13 per cent more than the previous high in 1929.

"Widespread expansion of productive activity and higher prices combined" to achieve the record, a statement said.

The estimate was somewhat higher than previously published figures, but the department explained its total was calculated on a slightly different basis from other so-called "national income" figures used by officials and economists.

The total included: Employment compensation including work relief, $64,800,000,000; net income of incorporated business, $7,200,000,000; net income of unincorporated business, including farmers, $14,600,000,000; net interest, $5,300,000,000, and net rents and royalties, $2,600,000,000.

Keel Laid at Norfolk For Battleship Kentucky

NORFOLK, Va., March 7.—(AP) The keel of the Navy's newest battleship, the 45,000-ton Kentucky, was laid today at the Norfolk Navy Yard on the same ways from which the 35,000-ton Alabama was launched on February 16.

Because of wartime restrictions the usual ceremonies were dispensed with.

The cost of constructing the Kentucky has been estimated at more than $110,000,000, but no official figure has been released by the Navy Department.

Canadian Victory Loan Reaches $885,960,800

OTTAWA, March 7.—(Canadian Press) — Subscriptions to Canada's second Victory Loan yesterday swelled the totals to $885,960,800, with more than 1,000,000 subscribers since opening of the three-week campaign which ends today, the loan committee announced.

Yesterday's business in cash subscriptions was $57,306,000. To this was added $38,090,000 in conversions of Dominion of Canada bonds.

There was no doubt but what the close of business tonight and the ending of the campaign would see the total at least at $900,000,000, the amount which the loan committee has hoped for since the original minimum objective of $800,000,000 was passed early this week.

Mayor's Race Would Be Big Aspirant Field

Many Council Members Advanced as Possible Candidates.

If there is a race for mayor to fill the unexpired term of Mayor LeCraw, who has been called to Army service beginning March 14, the woods will be full of candidates and most of them will be members of city council, if city hall reports of prospective aspirants are a barometer.

Just half of the six-man aldermanic board—Aldermen G. Dan Bridges, Ed A. Gilman and Frank H. Reynolds—have either announced they will be active candidates or have been advanced as probable candidates by their friends.

Add to this five council members—Cecil Hester, Mayor Pro Tem, George B. Lyle, J. Allen Couch, Howard Haire and John A. White—and the total number from council is pushed to eight—only one less than half of the 18-man body.

In addition Former Mayor William B. Hartsfield, Dewey L. Johnson, president of the Georgia Federation of Labor, and James R. Bachman, retired industrialist and former city alderman, have been getting a play by the gossips and the "throne makers."

JAYCEE PRESIDENT.

COLUMBUS, Ga., March 7.—Perry Gordy was made president of the Junior Chamber of Commerce Thursday succeeding Albert Stubbs who leaves soon for the Navy. The vice president, J. Gordon Young, left recently for the Army as did Rudy Martin, member of the board of directors.

A BOX FROM 'HOME'—Private Sid Weissman, a patient at Lawson General hospital, asked an Indianapolis newspaper to find him a correspondent and now they bring him his mail in pillow cases! This box full of candy, fruit and homemade cookies, arrived yesterday. Weissman, a native of New York, picked Indianapolis because he "liked the looks of that little town" when he hitch-hiked through there years ago.

Can't Get Indiana Off His Mind

A penniless, New York born boy who hitchhiked through Indiana a few years ago and "liked the looks of that little town" called Indianapolis so much he privately adopted it as his home town has been adopted in return by the state of Indiana and more than two thousand of its letter-writing, gift-sending citizens.

He is 23-year-old Sid Weissman, the most written-to, pampered soldier boy patient at the Army's big Lawson General hospital in Atlanta.

Private Weissman, sent here from Fort Bragg, N. C., several weeks ago with a sprained back gets mail by the pillow case full, and candy, fruit and home cooking enough to supply the length and breadth of Ward 8-A with between-chow refreshments.

Not Lonesome Now. "I don't deserve it," remarked Weissman yesterday, solemnly stuffing a marshmallow in his mouth. "But it sure does look like I picked the right state to adopt. Did you ever see such loot?" Private Weissman attributes the "loot" to a letter written last January to the Indianapolis Star in which he described himself as "sad and lonesome" and asked if the paper could find him a correspondent. Yesterday he was notified that an Indiana couple wanted to adopt him.

"What another one?" cried Weissman in astonishment. "Why, that's what all these want to do," and he ruffled through a stack of letters, cards and valentines, all that were left from a bonfire which he was forced to light before leaving Fort Bragg. "I'm a little old to be adopted, don't you think?"

Born in New York.

But on second thought Weissman decided that turn about was fair play since he adopted Indianapolis several years ago.

"I was bumming my way around the country and I hit Indianapolis one night. I decided if I ever had a home town that was the one I wanted. I like that little town!"

New York is technically Private Weissman's home, because he was born there, but his mother is dead and he has spent much of his life "on the bum." A great many Indiana women write him motherly letters and an airmail letter from an Indianapolis mailman yesterday admonishing him to take care of himself and "hurry up and get well" was signed "Your Mom." Letters come from all ages and Weissman started out to answer them all, but gave it up as a hopeless task after the first two or three hundred.

The big curly-haired, brown-eyed boy is encased in a plaster cast from his chest to his hips and spends most of his time lying on his stomach, a position not adapted to much letter writing.

School Musicians To Play At Festival Here This Week

By FRANK DRAKE.

More than 2,000 boys and girls will display their musical ability this week in the fifth district music festival, J. S. Rutan, general chairman for the district festival, announced yesterday.

The event will be held Wednesday, Thursday and Friday at Joe E. Brown Junior High school. Expected to be the largest district festival ever held here, it is not to be confused with the Greater Atlanta Music Festival, sponsored by The Constitution, which will be given Saturday night, May 9, at Grant field.

Virtually all boys and girls who enter the district festival, and many others, too, will participate in The Constitution's festival in the spring.

Groups To Be Rated. At Joe Brown school, the musical students will perform before outstanding judges who will award them a rating in relation to a recognized standard of excellence. The school bands, orchestras, instrumentalists, singers and baton twirlers will not compete against each other but will perform only to exhibit their competence.

Earl Slocum, head of the department of music, University of North Carolina, will judge brass and percussion instruments and bands, while John Vincent, head of the music department of Western Kentucky State Teachers College, will judge stringed instruments and orchestras. DuPre Rhame, head of Furman University music department, will judge vocalists.

Opens Wednesday.

The festival begins Wednesday morning when boys and girls of elementary schools perform, and pianists will be heard. Large vocal groups and small instrumental groups and soloists will play and sing Thursday, and small vocal groups, bands and orchestras and baton twirlers will perform Friday. Class A bands will play at the school auditorium Friday night.

Ratings of superior, excellent, very good, good, and fair will be awarded. Eligibility for entrance in the music festival at Milledgeville is based on ratings received in the district festival.

Monitor, Merrimac Clash 80 Years Ago; Made Sea History

Fate, the satirist, appears to be celebrating the 80th anniversary today of the famed clash between the Monitor and Merrimac—which jubilantly was termed the discovery of impregnable battleships—by demonstrating with the airplane that no battleship is impregnable!

Four score years ago this morning much history was made and an almost fatal superstition given currency, as the two ironclads stood in Hampton Roads, just outside Chesapeake bay, and blasted at each other with a fury no wooden ship could have withstood.

Never before had the world heard of an all-steel ship. Old mariners of that day snorted in disgust whenever some far-visioned person would suggest an all-steel vessel.

Mariners Skeptical. "Iron sinks—it don't float," the old mariners would say and walk off hunting for a padded cell for the nut who had suggested the thing.

The Merrimac, built on the James river in Virginia, by the Confederate forces, was the first all-steel vessel to see service. Early on the morning of March 8, 1862, it slipped from the mouth of the river into Hampton Roads. Daringly it approached the Congress and the Cumberland.

When their salvo resounded from her sides, the Merrimac shook herself like a mother grizzly disturbed from her winter's nap, and let them have it.

Soon the Congress and the Cumberland were on the bottom, and the Merrimac turned to attack the Minnesota. As she was getting ready to send over a salvo, the skipper, high up on the Merrimac's bridge, saw the Monitor approaching from the sea.

Both Surprised. "I'll get him first," the Merrimac's skipper said. He doesn't know my hull is all steel.

Soon the two vessels were within range. They fired until their guns grew hot and their gunners fell on the deck from exhaustion. "What's the matter with her—why don't she go down?" queried Captain Franklin Buchanan.

Then the two mighty vessels crashed. The impact threw the crews of both ships sprawling over the deck, but the boats continued to stand up in the water, and only a dent appeared in the sides of the two combatants.

In the raging battle, Little Worden lost an eye, while no members of the crew of either ship was seriously injured.

Commander Ward Harrigan, commandant of the Naval Reserve Air Base near Chamblee, is no believer in the impregnable, unsinkable battleship.

"It's day," he says, "is still a long way off."

Need Air Support. "The experience of the Prince of Wales, the Repulse and of the Bismark indicates that the big battle wagons of today need an air fighter patrol to keep bombers from sinking them."

"And then, too, there is the improvement of the explosives of this day and time. Torpedoes, either aerial or those fired by surface craft, will penetrate the toughest armor afloat today."

Modern naval warfare has advanced considerably since the day of the Merrimac and the Monitor and today it is more deadly than it was in those days.

The first practical use of the submarine and the airplane during wartime came in World War I. No airplanes of that day sunk any naval vessels, for the plane then was a tiny affair, whose only arms were machineguns of small caliber.

Old Method.

Ramming opponents was an old method in early naval warfare days, but Commander Harrigan pointed out that the ramming method now is practically obsolete, with the exception of larger and faster vessels ramming submarines.

"I think there have been sev-

THE FLOATING CHEESEBOX—An artist's conception of the memorable battle, 80 years ago, between the world's first iron-clad warships. The Yankee "Monitor," dubbed "the floating cheesebox," and the Confederacy's "Merrimac," bounced cannon balls off the sides of each other until their ammunition supply had given out, and their gun crews became exhausted. As a result of the memorable battle, naval strategists proclaimed to the world that the day of the impregnable ship had arrived.

eral instances of submarines being rammed since we entered the war," he said.

It was recalled that a garbage scow rammed a Jap sub just outside the San Francisco harbor, a few days after the infamous attack on Pearl Harbor.

Intimating that modern science has not found an impregnable battleship, Commander Harrigan cited the Bismark for a second time.

Deadly Accuracy.

"We were told she was the strongest piece of armor ever to float. But she proved to be a clear example of vulnerability. Naval vessels of today can fire away at each other with deadly accuracy, even when the target is invisible over the horizon."

But the armor of the Monitor and the Merrimac marked the beginning of a new era in naval warfare, and the mine, the submarine, the high explosives and the airplane have also marked the beginning of new eras.

But there are those experts who still are unwilling to lay a regretful wreath on the battleship.

There were numerous reports by the British that 110 bombings of the Brest waterfront had put the Scharnhorst, Gneisenau and Prinz Eugen of the German navy out of commission—and then came their successful dash through the Strait of Dover under terrific aerial and surface fire.

So there's no definite finding available yet.

On successful solution, however, of the problem first posed by the Monitor and Merrimac 80 years ago, doubtless hangs the fate of many nations in the months and years immediately ahead.

"There were a lot of Mormons moving through that section then," said Mrs. Bishop yesterday. "Folks didn't like them much. We didn't. But this poor man was mighty sick, so we took him in."

"We kept him a week and nursed him until he got well, and he started back to Utah."

Mrs. Bishop, a nurse for old people, now lives at 2015 College avenue, Kirkwood.

Dr. Dan Y. Sage Named Vice President at Meeting.

George McCord, social science teacher at Tech High school, took over the presidency of the Atlanta District Council of American Youth Hostels, Inc., at a meeting Friday night at the First Methodist church. He succeeds J. Lee Harne Jr., of the city recreation department.

Dr. Dan Y. Sage was named vice president and Mrs. Paul Ackery, secretary-treasurer. Members of the advisory board are Miss Gertrude Cadwell, L. S. Gilbert, Harne, Dr. Frank Lamons, Weaver Marr, Wayne K. Rivers, Mrs. J. O'Hara Sanders, Dr. Herman L. Turner and Dr. Willis A. Sutton.

The purpose of the organization is "to help all, especially young people, to a greater knowledge, understanding and love of the world by providing for them youth hostels and by assisting them in their travels over bicycle trails, foot paths and by-ways."

Dr. Harne L. Turner, pastor of the Covenant Presbyterian church and chairman of the Atlanta defense recreation committee, addressed the council, declaring "youth hosting, advocating as it does, individual responsibility and resourcefulness, dignifies human personality."

Sue Carol Is Granted Divorce From Writer

HOLLYWOOD, March 7.—(AP)—Sue Carol, a former film starlet who now operates an actors' agency, said today she had obtained a divorce in Las Vegas, Nev., from Howard Wilson, a writer.

They separated four months ago after four years of marriage. Miss Carol was divorced in 1934 from Nick Stuart, actor.

Farm Labor Loss Laid to Defense

Defense employment and not the draft has cost Georgia farms most of their labor losses, it was declared yesterday by Brigadier General Sion B. Hawkins, state selective service director.

"Local boards," he pointed out, "have ample authority to grant farm deferments where it can be shown that any farmer, farm supervisor or farm laborer can qualify as a 'necessary man' in the operation of any farm."

"We can only win this war by keeping the farm program going at top speed and maximum capacity for essential farm crops and retaining a proper balance between farming and the needs of industry and the armed forces."

Georgia Mills To Get Army Cloth Orders

$20,000,000 To Be Spent by War Department for Material.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP)—A $20,000,000 order for Army uniform cloth, distributed among more than 100 textile mills in a dozen states, was announced today by the War Department.

The primary contracts, for nearly 35,000,000 yards of cotton cloth, went to 19 contractors, but the War Department estimated the others would share through the industry's "contract distribution" plan.

The contracts involved nearly 8,000,000 yards of wind-resistant cut cloth, more than 25,000,000 yards of uniform twill, and some 3,000,000 yards of cotton twill. Mills expected to share the orders were not identified, but the War Department said 28 were in North Carolina, 25 in South Caro-

Amazed Congress Finds It's Banned Aid to Allies

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP)—Members of congress discovered to their amazement today that in recently reenacting the 1917 espionage law they had made it illegal—with the death sentence as a maximum penalty—for government officials to furnish military information or instruments of war to allied as well as enemy nations.

Voters' League Urges Adoption Of New Lists

Fulton Registration Roll Recommended for City Election.

(Editor's Note: The following article, discussing the use of the Fulton county registration list for city elections, was prepared by the Atlanta League of Women Voters.)

To use or not to use the new Fulton county registration list for city elections—that is the question confronting Atlanta's governing fathers today, and the question which the Atlanta League of Women Voters is seeking to clarify and solve.

When Mayor LeCraw was called into Army service, to begin March 14, there arose the immediate probability of an election to name his successor. Immediately, too, arose the question of what the city would use for a voters' list. Would it dust off the old, inaccurate one piled high with dead wood? Or would it call forth the spic-and-span up-to-date county list which the city attorney ruled out last September for city use because he believes it does not conform with certain legal technical requirements?

Briefly, here is the status of each of the registration lists. Both are county lists. But the occasion has not yet arisen for the new one to be used. In 1935 a charter amendment allowed Atlanta to use Fulton's list for all its citizens living within the county. This did away with the former confusing, duplicate system of registration whereby Atlanta voters had to register at both the city hall and county courthouse. County Tax Collector T. E. Suttles was appointed registrar for the city under the new amendment.

Confusion in List. Co-operation between city and county progressed until recently. After the last city election, there was widespread criticism of the voters' list and of the manner in which the election was conducted. A bond issue failed to pass because the list was so inaccurate—the laws are such that every inaccurate name on the list is virtually a vote against bonds.

The League of Women Voters made a thorough investigation and printed their results in November, 1940, issue of Facts. In one precinct alone, we found the names of 343 registered voters whom we were unable to locate by any method short of calling out the police. There were 61 names and addresses where there was no such number—nine of these were registered from a vacant lot. There were many names on the list of Chairman Austin, Republican, Vermont, said a Senate Military Affairs sub-committee was taking hasty steps to correct this situation by rewriting the 1917 act as a part of a war secrets bill now pending before the group.

The Vermont senator told reporters the committee had discovered that a strict construction of the 1917 act would prevent the communication, delivery or transmission to any foreign nation of documents, photographs, plans, maps, models, instruments, appliances or information relating to national defense.

Penalty For Violation. Penalty for violation of the law, aimed primarily at preventing the divulging of military information to the enemy, may be either 30 years imprisonment or in extreme cases, death.

The act, Austin said, puts a direct curb on the exchange of some types of information between the United States and other United Nations. Such exchanges were authorized by the lend-lease act, but that law was approved prior to reenactment of the espionage statute.

The committee is expected to act soon on the revamped war secrets bill. Austin predicted it would be approved in a form that would not force the "undue censorship."

Revising Measure. The committee has undertaken the task of revising a measure submitted by Attorney General Biddle which originally provided severe penalties for the divulging or publication of government documents which were declared by department heads to be confidential.

An objective of the new measure, Austin said, will be to assure that the American people are kept as fully informed of the conduct of the war as is possible without giving away secrets to the enemy. "We don't want to stifle information that the American people ought to have," he said. "We want to keep independent criticism alive. Publicity is an all-important factor in preventing extravagance, waste, selfishness and greed in the war program."

Similar powers over radio communications were given the board last December 10.

persons who had been dead for years. A vote had been cast in the name of one man who was definitely in a hospital at Milledgeville.

The league findings led to the appointment by city council of a special committee to study modern registration methods and to recommend a new system for Atlanta and Fulton county. On the committee were J. P. Allen (who had served as chairman of the bond campaign), Albert Gossett, representing labor; Frank Reynolds, representing council; T. Earl Suttles, representing the county, and Mrs. J. D. Thomas, representing the league and the general public.

New System Ruled Out. The committee met several times to study other systems. They arrived at what they considered an adequate bill. Their recommendations were unanimously adopted by council and were approved by the county commission. Fulton county delegation in the legislature, and numerous civic organizations. The bill was passed. All concerned believed the law would apply to both city and county primaries and elections.

Then came the city attorney's ruling last September 12 that Atlanta could not use the new voters' list on certain technical grounds.

The bill was drawn by competent lawyers and the county attorneys have ruled that the city can use the new list. So as to the legal technicalities there is a difference of opinion. But to use the old list would clearly violate the intent and wishes of the people.

Suttles resigned as city registrar after the city attorney ruled that Atlanta could not use the new list. He could not keep up two systems. The city faces the possibility of duplicating the county's work, at great expense to itself, and in the end still having an inaccurate list. If the city should use the old list, how would it be purged? Who would purge it? How much would this cost? And what of those who have registered under the new law but whose names are not on the old list? They are qualified under the general state laws, but will they be allowed to vote in the city elections?

City council already has passed resolutions asking the legislature to amend the law so there will be no doubt about the city using the new list.

And so the argument continues. The Atlanta League of Women Voters believes that the new accurate list should be used. Certainly it is clear that this was the intent of all concerned.

There is bowling and baseball and virtually every kind of sport. There are libraries with good books and lounging halls where the fellows play bridge, shoot pool and enjoy bull sessions. There are service clubs and dances and swimming pools.

The boys take advantage of these facilities, too. They're not the wild fellows they're sometimes pictured.

Reds Increase Pressure for Second Front

Considerable Anglo-American Support for Plan Reported.

LONDON, March 7.—(AP)—Soviet pressure for a second front in northern Europe which might swiftly link British, United States and Russian troops on a solid line was increasing in London tonight, with considerable Anglo-American support.

The Soviet argument, heard now wherever Russians, British and Americans meet, is that Hitler can be beaten by autumn provided there is bold use of his own divide and conquer strategy against him, and that once he is disposed of, Japan will be considerably less formidable to the United Nations.

Then, it is argued, United States and British naval forces would be free from Atlantic tasks for concerted action in the Pacific.

The Russians are encouraged to believe that establishment of a second front is not far off by the arrival of increasing United States forces in the United Kingdom.

Northern Norway.

They talk freely of northern Norway, where the coastline is difficult to guard and the country ideal for the infiltration tactics practiced by Japan in the Pacific campaign.

An Anglo-American drive across the top of Norway, which is almost contiguous with Soviet territory, could result in establishment of a common U. S.-British-Soviet frontier and protect the northern supply route via Murmansk and Archangel, it is contended. It also would free some Russian troops now in the far north for stronger offensive action on the central and southern fronts.

The Russians want such a front combined with increased British and American bombing attacks on Germany to hamper the Reich's war industry and snarl German rail lines so that Hitler will find it difficult to move armies east to protect western positions.

Many People.

There are many people in Britain who feel the same way as the Russians. Sir Stafford Cripps has been urging greater co-ordination with the Soviet war effort. The important Times today expressed concern over Russian anxiety about inadequate supplies from the west and Allied post-war intentions and urged closer tri-power political collaboration. It said Russia "asks for more than material supplies."

Russia claims the right, which London and Washington equally claim on their behalf, of judging for herself the conditions necessary to her own security.

Some important American opinion likewise parallels that of the Russians at least to the extent that it is upon aid to Russia and defeat of Hitler that the Allies should first concentrate, while they are mustering their strength at sea for countermoves in the Pacific.

which proved to be formidable weapons.

Without sufficient fighter protection, however, and protection against their value continually decreased.

The fact that the fighters on hand were not of a quality sufficient to successfully fight against the excellent Japanese material made itself especially felt. Not only did their offensive power decrease, but the operations of the heavy bombers became riskier.

At the end of February a situation arose in which Java was practically surrounded. The attack on Java was launched. General Wavell left.

Heroic Attempt.

In a heroic attempt to prevent enemy landings the Allied fleet 10 days ago did the utmost a fleet could do. Again, however, it faced superior enemy forces and the kernel of the Dutch fleet was lost.

Mourning over these losses cannot nullify our satisfaction with the magnificent work of the Allied fleet. As far as the Netherlands Indies fleet is concerned, one may say it fought itself to death.

The ships available in the Netherlands Indies have been lost in battle except for some smaller units which could not turn the tide.

When the landings on Java began, the forces defending this island were already in a position in which they could not carry on action at sea, while the air force for the greater part was exhausted.

The result of the battle in the Java sea on February 26 and 27 was also that Soerabaja became no longer usable as a base for cruisers and destroyers and that the necessary heavy bomber protection could no longer be given.

When the attack on Java finally began on the night of February 28-March 1, heavy losses were inflicted on the enemy during his landing attempts, but these successes also were paid for very dearly by the defenders.

The landings were carried out by greatly superior forces in Batavia, Indramajoe and Rembang.

The number of Japanese troops landed amounts to certainly seven, but possibly even 10 or more divisions (105,000 to 150,000 men).

After resistance at sea and in the air had been broken, the Jap-

Young Couples Are Warned About 'Love at First Sight'

Marriages based on "friendship which ripens into love" stand a far better chance of success than those based on "love at first sight," a prominent University of Chicago sociologist and marital expert, Dr. E. W. Burgess, warned young couples here yesterday.

At least a "year or two" of engagement was advised by the college professor, who also declared marriages are happier if parents give their consent.

Speaking before the 23d annual meeting of the Georgia Home Economics Association in the Henry Grady hotel, Dr. Burgess gave statistics on 526 Illinois marriages, which show:

anese had practically free play, and nothing could prevent them from landing as many men and as much material as they wished.

However, our command continued to be directed offensively not only at sea and in the air, but on land as well.

Everywhere the Netherlands Indies army tried to take the initiative, although almost immediately the Japanese, pushing forward from Indramajoe, managed to reach the heart of this central region, Soebang and the Kalidjati airport, located on the plains north of Tangkoeban Praho.

Awaiting what the enemy's next step would be was not, however, our command's intention. Immediate counter-action was decided on.

But the attack of our troops on the Bandoeng plain against the airport at Kalidjati proved once again that even crack troops cannot take the offensive without sufficient air protection. The troops were incessantly harassed by murderous dive-bombings.

History Will Tell.

Morale remained high, and history will tell of their many individual deeds of heroism, but protection against the inferno from the sky was impossible.

Other offensive actions were carried out against the Japanese troops which were landed in the vicinity of Indramajoe, but although carried out always with great courage and sometimes with partial success, they failed.

It was always the same story. With insufficient air-protection the troops were practically powerless.

On Java, where there was room for many thousands of planes, there was only an ever increasing air inferiority.

Meanwhile, these actions led to capital, had been cut off when the Japanese thrust southwestward and reached Buitenzorg, between Batavia and Bandoeng, the German report continued.

A Domei broadcast from Tokyo claimed that as a result Bandoeng was within a few miles of complete encirclement.

The German broadcasts acknowledged, however, that in eastern Java the Japanese had come up against heavy United Nations tank formations when they "penetrated to Soerabaja," the naval base which the Dutch already have in part destroyed.

The fall of Bandoeng would leave the Dutch but two other mountain strongholds from which to continue resistance: Magelang, 180 miles east, and Malang, 75 miles south of Soerabaja.

It was upon Bandoeng that they had based their greatest hopes, however, for it had been provisioned and munitioned and equipped with arms factories.

Its "backdoor" port of Tjilatjap, on the south coast, already was largely destroyed by Japanese bombers. The Japanese today declared five out of seven ships anchored there were destroyed in a raid last Wednesday and that wharves and warehouses were set afire.

Informed Dutch quarters in London said that the Japanese probably had landed heavy 155 millimeter howitzers to smash their way toward Bandoeng and

Milk Mixture For Stomach Ulcers
A recent medical discovery now being used by doctors and hospitals everywhere has proven unusually successful in the treatment of stomach ulcers caused by excess acid. It is a harmless preparation yet so effective that in many cases the pains of stomach ulcers disappear almost immediately after it is used. Also recommended for gas pains, indigestion and heartburn due to hyperacidity. Sufferers may now try this at home by obtaining a bottle of Lurin from their druggist. Lurin contains this new discovery in its purest form. Easy to take. Just mix two teaspoonfuls in a half glass of milk. Costs but little. Try a bottle. It must satisfy or money refunded. The class will provide special coaching for passing the next citizenship test to be held late in the spring.

U. S. Japs Will Go All Out for America, One of Them Says

LOS ANGELES, March 7.—(AP)—Tokie Slocum, a Japanese granted American citizenship by congress for his services as sergeant major with the redoubtable Sergeant Alvin York's outfit in the first World War, told a house committee today that Japanese living here would go all-out with America to help win the war.

Nixon Suggests Naming Mayor To Defense Job

Plan Would Put LeCraw Army Co-ordinator for Atlanta.

A movement to have the Army assign Mayor LeCraw as head of unified civilian defense activities in the Atlanta metropolitan area provided he goes on active duty March 14 was started yesterday at city hall. At the same time Councilman John White was announcing he would introduce resolutions in city council tomorrow calling for the erection of air raid shelters in the city and asking the Office of Civilian Defense in Washington to provide adequate defense supplies such as steel helmets and gas proof capes, for this area.

Dean James M. Landis, director of the National Office of Civilian Defense, yesterday characterized the need for co-ordination in Atlanta activities as "obvious and pressing."

At the same time he was placed in the position of denying a quotation never attributed him—the statement of other OGD officials that the Atlanta situation was one of the "chief headaches" of the OGD. He denied he had said the Atlanta situation "is the chief headache of the national organization," in that manner being placed in the position of denying a statement made by others.

The mayor said he still intended to go into the Army as a major March 14 unless he is ordered deferred by high Army officials and that there had been no change in his status.

However, John A. Nixon, attached to General E. G. Peyton's office as chief of the warden's division, suggested that in view of the recent controversy over a co-ordinated command for the fifth district he thought he would be a good idea for the Army to make Mayor LeCraw, who is a major, military czar of the entire area, thus carrying out the proposals advanced during the last few days that an Army officer take charge.

Nixon did not outline what steps would be taken to carry out his proposal but suggested that Fulton, DeKalb, Rockdale and parts of "Nearly all the Japanese in Los Angeles are loyal Americans," Slocum told the committee on Alien Defense Migration. "I believe all the traitors are now in concentration camps. I personally led FBI agents to their lair after the treacherous Pearl Harbor attacks."

"And since the Army had ordered the evacuation of all Japanese, by golly that is what the Army will get, if I have to lead them. The United States is dealing with a bunch of military outbursts in Japan and this country is going to have to wake up if we are going to win the war."

"We haven't been half tough enough. I fought in the last World War and was granted American citizenship by a special act of congress in 1935. Now I am in a position of being forced to evacuate my home to help win this war. I am glad to make this sacrifice—and so are all other patriotic Americans of Japanese ancestry."

"All we want to know is when, where and how. We'll need some money but we have unlimited faith in our government."

Cobb county which would be near the Bell bomber plant, be placed under Mayor LeCraw's jurisdiction. To Ask for Supplies.

In his series of proposed resolutions Councilman White pointed out that since Atlanta is within 300 miles of the coast and, therefore, is in the vital defense area, the OGD in Washington should be called on immediately for such supplies as steel helmets, gas-proof capes, and bands and firemen's turn-out coats.

Dispatches from Washington, meanwhile, said that OGD officials predicted orders would go out from the War Department "with-out delay" for the first supply of equipment to protect persons and property in the nation's "target areas" from bombing attacks, sabotage and other war hazards.

In a separate resolution, Councilman White will urge that General Peyton, upon recommendations from the city planning engineer as to location, make immediate plans for the erection of emergency air raid shelters.

In a third resolution, he will ask for the appropriation of $6,000 for the purchase of cots, sheets, pillow cases, mattresses and other supplies for emergency hospital purposes.

Mayor LeCraw, in a meeting yesterday with his department heads, recommended that a drill in evacuating the city hall be staged sometime this week. He instructed Building Manager Glenn Dewberry to arrange for the drill.

16 Fulton Schools To Become Centers

Effective tomorrow 16 Fulton county schools will be open at night for use as training centers in various phases of civilian defense, Jere A. Wells, Fulton county superintendent, announced yesterday.

The schools, which have been selected so as to make them convenient to large groups with a minimum of transportation, include:

Milton High school, Alpharetta; Roswell High school, Roswell; Hammond school, Sandy Springs; North Fulton High, Buckhead; E. P. Howell school, Howell Mill road; Chattahoochee school, Riverside; West Fulton High, Center Hill district; Margaret Fain school, Adamsville; Ben Hill school, Ben Hill; Lakewood Heights school, Lakewood Heights; Hapeville High school, Hapeville; Marion Smith school, Egan Park; Russell High school, East Point; Richardson High school, College Park; Campbell High school, Fairburn; and Charles E. Riley school, Palmetto.

Superintendent Wells asked that citizens who use these buildings refrain from smoking and littering up the building and that teachers' books and papers be undisturbed.

Instructor Howard J. Edens yesterday began demolition and clearance classes at Commercial High school. The 125 members of the city construction department in this class also will receive the 15-hour course of air raid wardens.

Lieutenant Dowis' Services Offered

The services of Lieutenant Paul Dowis, of the Fulton county police department, as an executive director to co-ordinate the training of civilians for defense in this county, were offered yesterday to Earl Cooke, chairman for civilian defense of the fifth district in Georgia.

Gloer Bailey, acting chairman of the Fulton county board of commissioners, in a letter to Cooke, recommended Dowis for such a position for the duration of the emergency.

Lieutenant Dowis, 32, is a graduate of the FBI Training school in Washington, D. C., and has helped organize several training schools. He has also taken a leading part in civilian training during recent months, especially in regard to police work.

London Story About Convoys Brings Protest

U. S. Should Learn News Through Own Press—Voorhis.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP)—Representative Voorhis, Democrat, California, protested in the house today against publication under a London dateline of a news story concerning the movement of United States transports in the south Pacific.

"It seems to me that if censorship means anything at all," he said in a one-minute speech, "this certainly is the main place it should be applied."

(The story was cleared by British censors and thereupon became available under American censorship rules for publication in this country.)

Later, Voorhis told reporters that if such stories endangered the safety of Allied efforts and personnel they should not be passed by censors, but "if the American public can be given this information they should get it through their own press, not through London."

Lawrence Camp Says Friends Urging Him To Race Russell

By LUKE GREENE.

Georgia political circles were buzzing yesterday with reports that United States District Attorney Lawrence Camp would oppose Senator Russell in the coming primary and Camp, although denying he had made up his mind to make the race, said he was being urged to become a candidate by many individuals and groups.

Camp attempted to unseat Senator George in 1938, after receiving the blessings of President Roosevelt, but was defeated.

Asked yesterday about the reports he definitely would run against Russell, District Attorney Camp denied he seriously was considering the prospect, and hastened to explain he was forbidden from participation in politics under the Hatch act.

Some politicians regarded it as significant, however, that Camp's term as district attorney was up February 14. He has not yet been re-appointed, but it also was pointed out that a reappointment sometimes is not made for several months.

Political observers believe if

Camp chooses to run he will have the backing of the Talmadge faction, if the Governor decides to seek re-election. Camp and the Governor have been rather close in recent months.

The only other candidate for senate looming on the horizon is Commissioner of Agriculture Tom Linder, who has been getting a wedge in national affairs through numerous trips to Washington and appearances before congressional committees in connection with his fight for parity farm prices.

Dallas Career Girls Wow Army in Party War of Their Own

By TOM SIMMONS.

DALLAS, Texas, March 7.—Dallas Career Girls, the stenographers and filing clerks who put glamor in the fighting man's furlough, have lost their first battle, but the wise boys are laying odds they'll win their own private war.

The girls were too good for their own good. Three weeks from the time they held their first meeting, they had put Dallas on the soldier boy's map as the place to spend that once-in-a-lifetime weekend. From Camp Bowie, Sheppard Field, Fort Sill came insistent calls by telegraph, telephone, air mail and post card—"When's your next dance?" Another month left to their own devices and the girls would have made Dallas the Mecca for soldiers, sailors and Marines from Quantico to Dutch Harbor.

"Rears Its Head."
But the Y. W. C. A. reared its head. The Y. W. C. A., you see, gave a dance for service men that was slightly conspicuous by its lack of man power. Bluntly, not a single soldier or sailor or Marine or Coast Guardsman or mess boy showed up.

But let's take the rise and fall of the Career Girls in a chronological manner. We'll tell all about the hair pulling in due time.

On December 8, the day after Pearl Harbor, Mrs. Jeanne Johnson, a brunette eye-filling receptionist and stenographer at a large hotel, wondered what she could do to help Slap the Japs. Her an occasion, a chance to go into action. The Shock Troops, or a considerable percentage of them, are advised to hold themselves in readiness for occasions when soldiers turn up unexpectedly. Twenty-seven were told to hustle home after work, grab a bite and be on the dance floor in evening dress by 6 p. m. They made it, and a swell time was had by all with the official midnight ceremony coming at 9:30 so the boys could be back in the barracks by eleven. That was the first sample servicemen had had of the Career Girls' hospitality, and the word spread. Soldiers began making Dallas a must point on every leave. The girls set up a date bureau, and often provided escorts for 50 servicemen a night.

Avalanche of Calls.
A couple of more dances brought an avalanche of telephone calls from every training center in north Texas. Everyone was delighted—that is, all but the Y. W. C. A. The girls had been giving their dances at Dallas' USO Hall. A very nice co-operative arrangement it was, too. Then some USO brass had decided the Y. W. C. A. should be put in charge of all USO entertainment. That was swell for the "Y." Some of its plump matrons didn't think so much of the Career Girls. Working girls, they were, and they didn't like to keep on their dignity all the time. They liked an occasional cigarette, and some of them even wore socks!

So the "Y" announced it would form its own Victory Belles, and laid down a list of rules that could have been taken from a prim young ladies' finishing school a half-century ago. Only single girls between 18 and 30 admitted, all girls must wear hostess badges, must wear hose (never, my dear, socks!), must wear evening dresses, neither strapless nor backless (what! no mother husbands?) and then there was something about always being willing to take the chaplain's advice as to conduct.

Victory Belles.
Which would have been all right, but the USO decreed that only Victory Belles could appear at its dances.

The Career Girls thought that was Pearl Harbor all over again. They got their bosses on their side, and the soldiers were for them, and so was most of the town. But the bosses' wives were for the "Y." It doesn't take a clairvoyant to figure that answer. Mrs. Johnson—now Colonel Johnson, the commander-in-chief of the defense corps—decided to bow gracefully. "The nation needs unity," she said, "and if we got to squabbling among ourselves it won't help anybody. We're trying to aid the soldiers, and if we avoid the Victory Belles we'll only be hurting them. So some of us are going to join up. But don't write us off the books as a total loss. We've got some infiltration tactics that may surprise everybody."

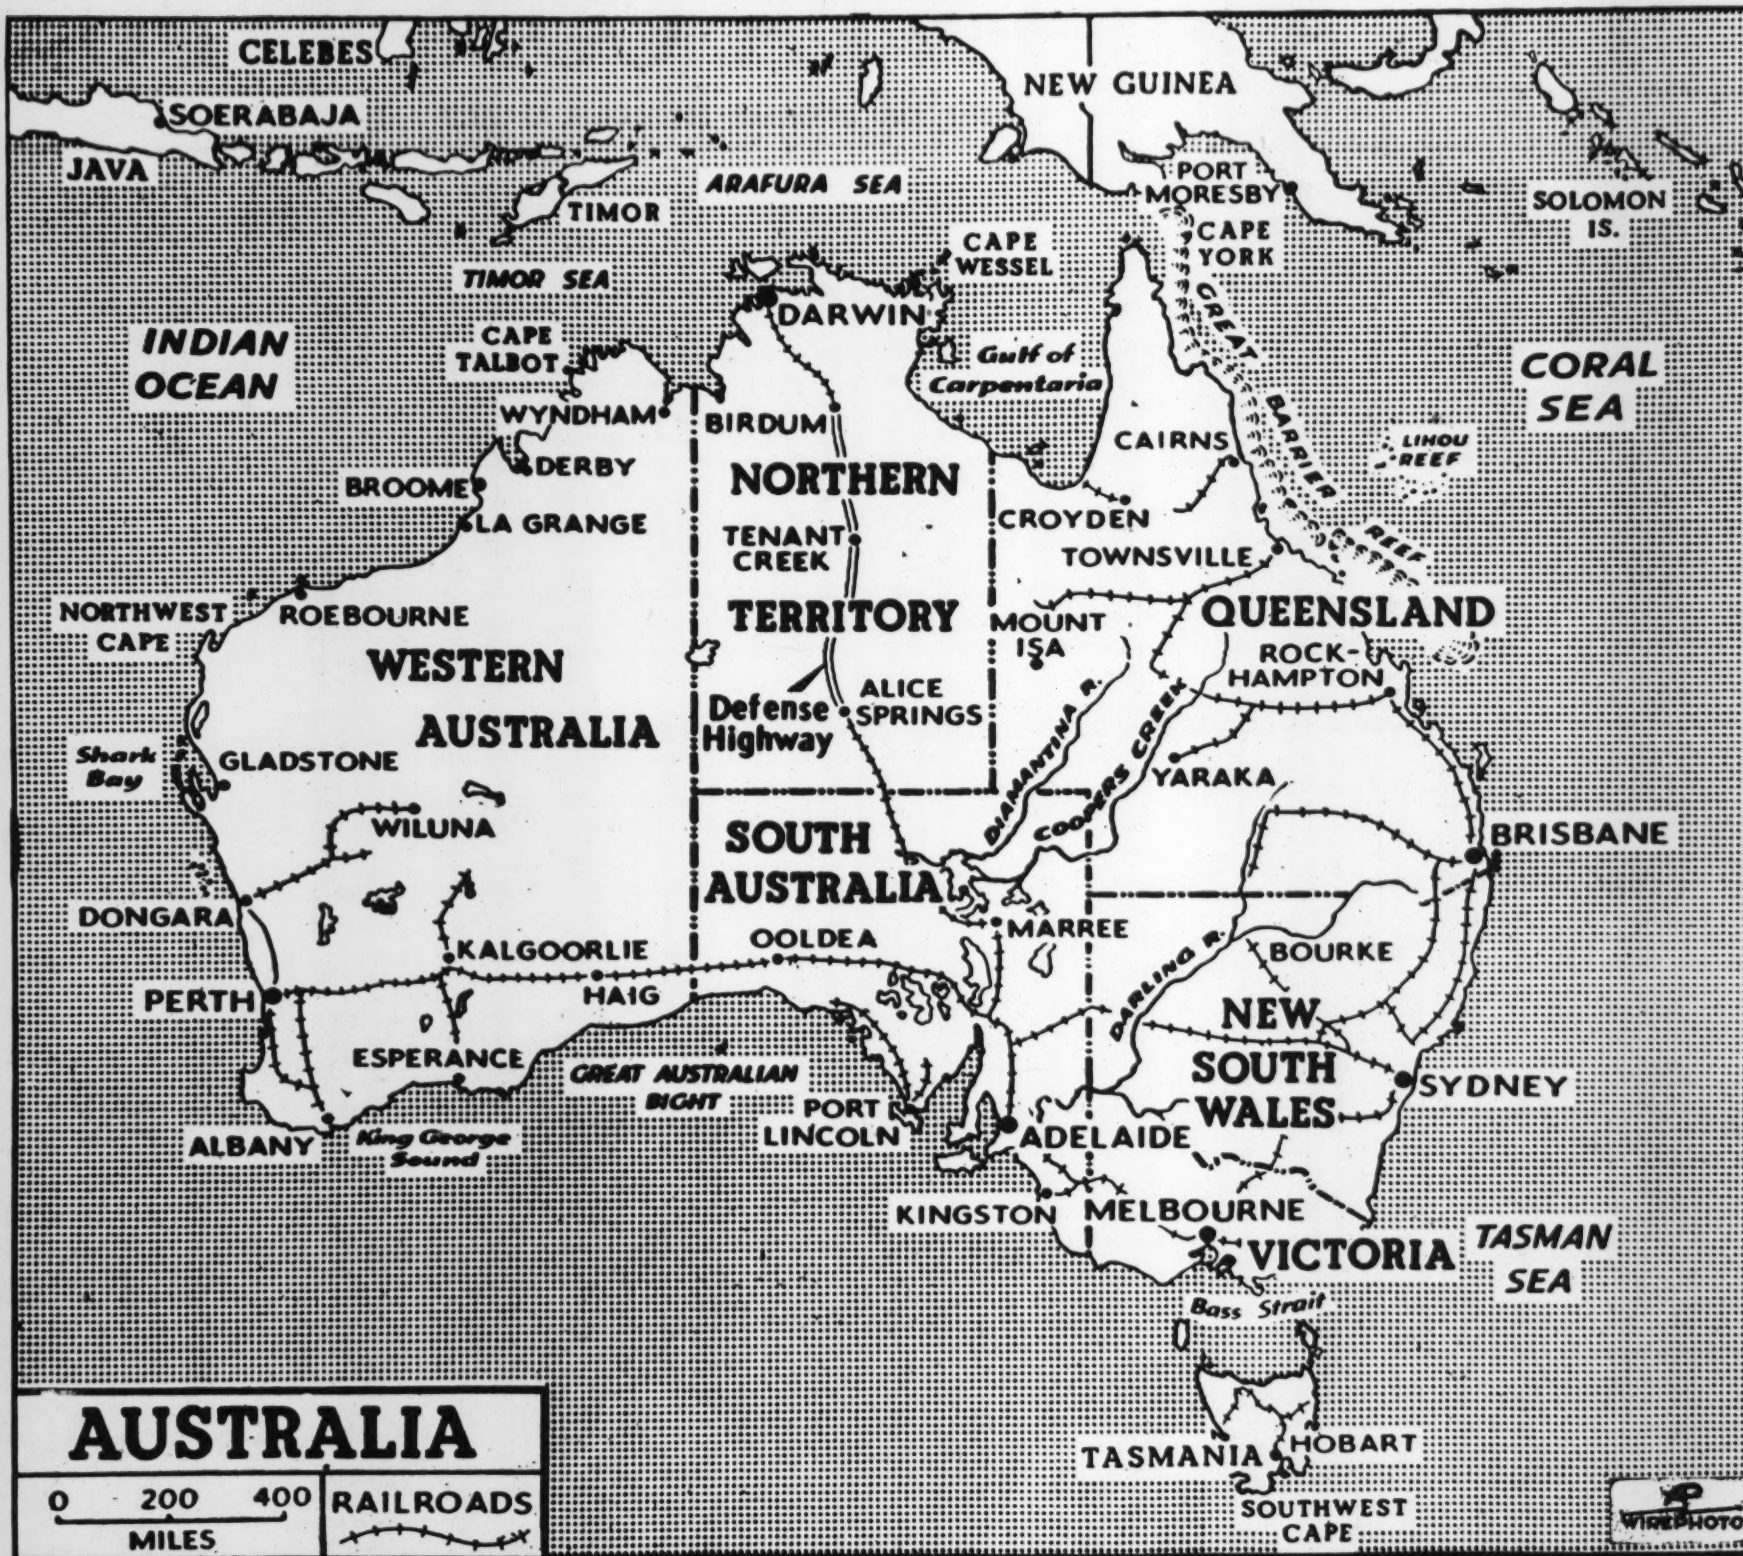

Their Identity.
The Career Girls are going to keep their identity, and their trim slate-blue uniforms. And perhaps they'll have a secret password that identifies them at USO dances. So keep coming, boys!

One of the Y's objections to the Career Girls was that too much emphasis was placed on dancing. The Y wanted to fix things so soldiers' welfare would be taken care of at all times—see that they got to church, have tennis partners of mornings, and such.

But it was just the dances that got the publicity. The Career Girls' curriculum is top-heavy with non-frivolous items. They are knitting for the Red Cross—one of their first completed projects was the establishment of a downtown center where they could knit in odd moments. They are helping draft boards and other defense organizations with clerical and stenographic work. Colonel Johnson hopes every member can take a first aid course. A motor corps is being organized. A rifle corps is developing 300 sharpshooters. Nearly 400 girls are studying aviation, both ground work and actual flying, through the co-operation of flying school owners who teach them to solo at minimum fees.

Swell Affair.
The first dance was planned for New Year's eve as a swell affair. Everything was fixed to show the servicemen as fine a time as they could have at $10-a-head hotel dance—and all for free. Then, in mid-afternoon of December 31 soldiers' leaves were suddenly cancelled. But the USO found some fledgling fliers at Love Field, Dallas, who could get away early.

That gave the girls' Shock Troops, expressly formed for such

Next Battle Area?—With Java apparently doomed to go under the heel of the slant-eyed invader, Australia looms as the next battleground between tyranny and the United Nations. Control of Darwin and the northern coast of Australia would help Nippon to prevent harassing of its supply lines to the Dutch East Indies. It would provide bases from which to oppose any Allied offensive moving up from southern Australia and New Zealand. Alert readers will keep this map to chart the Japs' coming moves and Allied counter-moves.

United Nations Gird For Pacific Offensive

By DREW MIDDLETON.

LONDON, March 7.—(AP)—The United Nations girded tonight at the start of four months of Pacific war for a mighty defense and an even greater offense as the tide of Japanese soldiery lapped at the gates of India and Australia.

Despite the imminent loss of Java, informed military sources noted some elements of improvement in the Allied position as a whole.

Reports published in London of large United States convoys of ships, men and planes speeding through the Pacific and bound apparently for Australia, and the arrival of new British tanks to stem the enemy's assault in Burma are regarded as proof that Britain and the United States have selected India and Australia as bases for counter-offensives against Japan.

Confidence in Wavell.
In London clubs tonight they were betting that "Archie Wavell," backed by half a million Indian, British and Australian troops, can pin down the Japanese forces in Burma until such time as he is able to throw in reserves which will roll the enemy back from the borders of India proper.

Apparently Washington also thought General Sir Archibald Wavell's chances were good for defending India. An American mission is going there to help him establish an Allied arsenal.

But Wavell, as well as anyone, knew he had to move fast. Japanese infantry, tempered by the campaigns of Malaya and Java, will be moving north to supply the final push in Burma as soon as Java is fully conquered, and the lower Burma fighting dwindles to jungle shooting scrapes and night raids.

Aircraft and Tanks.
Aircraft and tanks to pace the Allied counter-thrusts into Burma, Thailand and Indo-China and perhaps through Persia to aid the Russians on the southern front are expected to come from the Indian base. But even the most optimistic admit that it will take time, perhaps a year or more. For the present Wavell must depend on the present Indian army, plus some British troops and a hodge-podge of American aircraft and tanks.

Any armored divisions which go to this theater must be drawn from the last strategic reserves open to the Allies, the armies in the British Isles and the United States.

The defense of India is dictated as much by world strategy as by the necessity of defending this vast segment of empire.

So long as the British naval station of Trincomalee on Ceylon holds fast, the Japanese cannot cross the Indian Ocean in force to cut the Allied supply lines to Persia and Russia.

While India Stands.
While India stands, the Germans and Japanese, no matter how successful they are on the Russian and Burmese fronts, will never be able to join hands in Persia and girdle the globe for the Axis.

Australia and New Zealand are expected here to furnish the bases for a northward blow timed to catch the Japanese when they are rolled back from India's approaches.

Many persons here believe the Japanese, if they follow the German plan, will not invade Australia now but will go for India. According to this theory, the Germans want the Japanese in India as much as the Japanese want to be there; that with the Japanese in possession of India, and Australia all but cut off from direct contact with the mother country, Germany feels she will be in a position to bargain with Britain if the German spring campaign in Russia goes badly.

NORSE SAIL FOR U. S.
LONDON, March 7.—(AP)—A reliable Norwegian source said today that 12,000 Norwegian sailors were being sent to the United States to join the United States Merchant Marine.

By C. YATES McDANIEL.
PERTH, Australia, March 7.—(AP)—I have reached friendly and still-peaceful Australia 12 days after being driven through the air and sea to Batavia as a deck passenger aboard a 40-year-old Dutch freighter with 90 American, British and Dutch refugees.

Also aboard our ancient vessel when we left was probably the last cargo of tin from the East Indies and a load of cattle, sheep, pigs and fowl.

The 2,300-ton ship brought us unscathed into a little Australian port after tossing and pitching 2,000 miles through turbulent waters of the Indian ocean. With all her human and metal cargo intact, but with only two forlorn cows out of our original livestock—for we ate the rest en route.

As our convoy steamed south into the straits of Sunda the British cruiser Exeter, which helped drive the German pocket battleship Admiral Graf Spee to suicide off Montevideo, cut across our path leading a vessel Batavia-bound.

The sun rose the next morning over Java head, behind clouds settling over Krakatoa volcano. It was an inspiring sight, but few passengers were able to enjoy nature's wonders, for our little ship—which had never been outside the placid waters of the Java sea—was wallowing sickly in troughs and deep swells of the Indian ocean.

The little ship kept up her rolling and pitching until the Australian coast was sighted. Seaside casualties were heavy. But stricken members, many of whom left the Indies during my es-

Armored Force Attacks Japs Near Rangoon

MANDALAY, March 7.—(AP)—British armored forces repeatedly attacked enemy positions in the Pegu area, 54 miles northeast of Rangoon, today in the face of severe mortar fire.

The Japanese spearhead menacing Rangoon was being reinforced, it was reported, by troops swarming across the Sittang at narrow points above Pegu.

They continued to come on, despite heavy strafing by the RAF. British bombers, it was reported, penetrated deep into Thailand, raiding railroads having big stores of enemy supplies.

If Pegu falls, the next step in the Japanese advance probably would be an attempt to capture the junction of Burma's two trunk highways northward, one via Pegu, the other by way of Prome.

MERCER SPEAKER.
MACON, Ga., March 7.—Dr. Josiah Crisp, professor of physics at Mercer University, spoke at the meeting of the Mercer Life Service Band Thursday night.

After spending weeks too close

Writer's Pretty Wife Flees Japs 8 Times

(Pretty Natalie McDaniel, wife of the Associated Press correspondent C. Yates McDaniel, has made her eighth escape from the Japanese in five years. She is awaiting her husband, who was the last United States reporter to leave Singapore, and who has now reached Australia after fleeing tottering Java. Mrs. McDaniel, who was formerly Miss Natalie Ellis, of Boston and Los Angeles, accompanied her husband on former assignments in China, French Indo-China and Singapore.)

By NATALIE McDANIEL.
MELBOURNE, Australia, Sunday, March 8.—(AP)—Eight times a refugee from the Japanese, I once again am awaiting my newspaperman husband. He'll be here soon, for he has reached Perth, on the southwest Australian coast, from Shanghai, Hongkong, Canton, French Indo-China, Tientsin and then Singapore and Batavia—one by one I've fled from their falling walls.

After spending weeks too close to the battle zones, this war-ready city seems positively peaceful.

Saw Singapore Burn.
I left my husband, C. Yates McDaniel, in Singapore and while the boat stood several days in the harbor I watched the city burn and crumble under terrific bombardments.

I proceeded to Java which soon became unsafe and then fled again by boat.

Only after my arrival here did I learn of Yates' dangerous flight from Singapore and that he had arrived in Batavia the day before my departure. We barely missed seeing each other.

Singapore was under constant and furious attack when I left. From the decks we watched huge explosions in the city proper. Closer to us—a half mile on either side—I witnessed the bombings of the fortress and island oil installations.

We were not bombed on the entire trip to Batavia. From that capital of the Dutch East Indies, I went to Bandoeng seeking word of my husband. I rested a few days at Poentjak Pas before returning to Batavia.

Java then was the object of reconnaissance flights but little Japanese bombing. Everywhere trains and buses were operating on schedule. Shops were open and street life was normal.

Batavia was bombed twice while I was there but the explosives fell at the harbor which was so distant I could not even see what happened.

Warned to Leave.
I was warned it was advisable to leave and I began to seek a means of escape. By chance I learned that a Dutch ship was departing. Going to catch the boat, I passed through rural scenes of men tilling the soil and it was the all-clear was sounded at 11:27 Honolulu time, or 4:57 p. m. eastern war time).

The Army declined to divulge the reason for the alarm until all apparent danger had passed.

People dashed from the streets and buildings into bomb shelters on downtown street corners, while some sought protection from concrete and wood overhangings of buildings.

Soldiers and sailors sped to their posts. Large numbers of soldiers and sailors, customary on the streets, have been missing for the last few days.

The sirens sounded for several minutes, but laughing and talking continued in crowded hotel lobbies, although many were obviously nervous.

Radio stations went off the air at 9:45 a. m. without warning. Radio communications with the mainland were broken off simultaneously with sounding of the alarm.

Fighting News All Bad, Shift In Trend Seen

Day of Attack Seen as Drawing Near in Pacific.

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) The fourth month of the Pacific war opened today with the news still grimly bad and the United Nations still desperately on the defensive, but with indications that the day of attack may be drawing near.

In three months of fighting, the Japanese have overrun the southwestern Pacific, and southeastern Asia. General MacArthur still clings to his peninsula tip in the Philippines. The Dutch, overwhelmed, have abandoned hope of retaining more than an isolated area in Java. The British have lost Malaya and Singapore. They have been forced out of a vital section of Burma. The Burma road has been cut.

The master of this vast area, Japan now is expected to carry its attack to the northern shore of Australia. The British have lost bases from which the counter-attack may be initiated. And sweeping on through Burma, she may attempt to invade India, as part of a master Axis plan which includes a simultaneous Nazi drive into that country from the Near East.

Fighting News Is Bad.

The news of the actual fighting is all bad, but it is relieved by the fact that among the United Nations there seems to be growing a new spirit of attack, implemented by an ever-growing air force, Army and Navy, and by the constantly increasing production of American factories and shipyards.

There is no comfort for the Japanese in the war just received from the mid-Pacific of an enormous American convoy, packed with striking power, on its way to the zone of battle—shipsloads of well-trained men, and well-made machines of war. Presumably the cargoes of those vessels include hundreds of fighter planes. Lack of this type of craft has been fatal to one Allied stand after another.

Word of this convoy—one of many which will be churning across the Pacific—is ample argument that plans for taking the offensive at an early date have been laid. The argument is made stronger by the news that its contents emphasize striking power.

The argument is made logical, too, by the fact that with Japan's conquest of the East Indies her defensive problems increase. She must hold what she has gained. In the fighting thus far the great Japanese advantage has not been confined to the numerical superiority of her troops and planes.

Jap Advantages.
The Japanese have also had on their side the fact that over a tremendous area of sea, islands and mainland, they could choose the point to be attacked and the time for the assault. The Allies have been forced to spread their meager forces thinly over this large expanse in a hopeless effort to parry the enemy thrust wherever it might strike. Now to a large extent, that situation is reversed.

Now, it is the Japanese who must deploy thousands of miles from their home ports, and the United Nations who have the advantage of choosing time and place. But this is true only in the area north of Australia. The strategists say that the northern shore of that big island-continent must be retained for the sake of the bases it will afford.

hardly believable that invasion was near.

The boat was not filled completely. Most of the passengers were women who learned of the sailing by chance and almost missed it.

The trip from Java was quite uneventful but sad. Many of the women had left their husbands behind.

My roommate, Marietta Mould Montgomery of New York, was married, but her husband, who was a soldier, remained behind.

I understand that most American civilians escaped.

After many agonizing hours of uncertainty and many warnings of the gravity of the Java situation which made it seem unlikely my husband got away, I received a telegram from him in Perth.

How he learned my whereabouts, even at which hotel I am staying, I do not know. But I am thankful that he is in a city untouched by the Japanese and soon is due to be in a still safer city.

Honolulu Is Startled By Hour Raid Alarm

HONOLULU, March 7.—(AP)—Honolulu, scene of Japan's first attack against the United States, underwent a 67-minute air raid alarm today, but no hostile planes appeared.

Radios were ordered off the air this morning after Army detectors heard "unidentified elements at sea" and half an hour later the sirens screamed their warning.

Civilians rushed to air raid shelters while the few soldiers and sailors in the streets hurried to their posts.

A 67-minute air raid alarm for the Hawaiian Islands ended at 11:27, the Army said in a cryptic announcement. "The alarm sounded at 10:20 after defense units detected the approach of unidentified elements at sea."

"Previously radio stations in Hawaii were ordered off the air as a precautionary measure at 9:45 a. m."

(The radio silence prevented any word of the alarm reaching the mainland until

A class in defense gardening with E. P. Magee, DeKalb county agent in charge, will open at 3:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon at the Lithonia school house. Classes will be held each Monday and Thursday afternoon, while another class, also to be conducted by the county agent, will start at 7:30 o'clock Tuesday night at the Decatur hall.

Miss Sara Weaver will start a nutrition class Tuesday night at the Decatur Boys' High school.

Specimens of DeKalb county citizens who have volunteered as blood donors will be taken next week at the county health office.

Classes in canteen work, which will be held from 4 to 6 o'clock each Monday at the Decatur First Methodist church, began last Monday, while a physical fitness class, to be conducted at 7:30 o'clock each Monday night, started last week in the auditorium of the Decatur Boys' High school.

The Atlanta unit of the American Women's Voluntary Services announces the opening of another evening class in Spanish at 7:30 o'clock tomorrow, in the recreation room of Marist College.

Miss Dorothy Moran, teacher of the class, plans to make it a course in conversational Spanish for beginners. This class has been opened to members of C. D. V. O., as well as A. W. V. S. registrants. Mrs. M. W. Sledge, chairman of the A. W. V. S. Spanish classes, may be reached at headquarters, 251 Peachtree street for additional information.

Jr A.W.V.S. Provides Messenger Service

Messenger service for A. W. V. S. headquarters is being furnished by members of the Junior A. W. V. S. Reporting for duty the first week were Mickey Duvall, Daisy Eastman, Elizabeth Eaddy and Lorraine Vicknair.

Files Being Prepared To Aid Defense Units

The A. W. V. S. office force under the direction of Mrs. Leo B. Wilson, is compiling complete files according to streets of Atlanta, so that all defense organizations may be supplied with the names of women available in all areas.

170 Enrolled in Communications Class

Two classes in communications began last week at A. W. V. S. headquarters, under the direction of Philip Jones. Each class will meet twice a week for instructions in the continental code. The combined enrollment of the two classes is 170 members, from both A. W. V. S. and C. D. V. O.

Mrs. McGill Teaches First-Aid Class

Because of official duties, members of the A. W. V. S. office force have found no time in which to study First Aid. Realizing this, Mrs. Ralph McGill, vice chairman of the Atlanta unit A. W. V. S. and a certified Red Cross First Aid instructor, has begun teaching a class in First Aid at the A. W. V. S. headquarters, 251 Peachtree street, twice a week for members of the working staff.

A.W.V.S. Training Courses Depicted In Show Windows

The show windows at A. W. V. S. headquarters have been decorated by Davison-Paxon, depicting the various courses of training given by the Atlanta unit of the American Women's Voluntary Services, and also the defense gardening program which is sponsored by the A. W. V. S.

Pamphlets Added To OCD Files.

Additional literature has been received this week from the Consumers' Council to augment that available at the information service desk of the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office. Among these new pamphlets which may be taken home for study are "The Fight Against Inflation," by Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau Jr.; "Consumer Prices," directly from the OPM; "Rules and Regulations Governing Weights and Measures of the City of Atlanta" and the "Manual for Civilian Defense," published by the United States Army Review.

Many Aides Trained For Fire, Police Forces.

A highly interesting part of the work of the CDVO placement division is that connected with the auxiliary fire and police units of civilian protection. All auxiliary firemen and policemen trained or in training by the fire and police departments are selected from their registration cards at the Civilian Defense Volunteer Office. The second class of auxiliary policemen to be trained has just been graduated and several classes of auxiliary firemen have received their training courses. Graduates from both these schools are then assigned by the police and fire departments for work in their home communities.

Junior League Official Visits Office Here.

Among interested visitors at the CDVO at 246 Peachtree street this week was Mrs. Robert Dingman, of New York, ways and means chairman of the Association of Junior Leagues of America. Mrs. Dingman was brought to the office by Mrs. Edwin McCarty, president of the Atlanta Junior League.

Thousands of Civilians Said Being Trained.

Mrs. Mamie K. Taylor, training chairman, CDVO, releases interesting figures from her department this week. "Literally thousands of civilians are now engaged in training designed to prepare them for a specific defense duty," she says.

She reports that 5,393 citizens have registered through CDVO for various Red Cross courses, 899 have enrolled for courses given by the AWVS, 2,500 are now in training under Civilian Protection, and an additional 15,000 trainees, already selected, are waiting the Civilian Protection course.

After having been closed for a few days while waiting for a shipment of supplies to come in, the surgical dressings division of the Red Cross, at 850 West Peachtree street, will be reopened tomorrow to workers who wish to assist in making surgical dressings.

Mrs. John O. Chiles, chairman of production for the Atlanta chapter of the Red Cross, also calls attention to the fact the Tuesday night group of volunteers, who have been meeting each week at a later hour, are requested to report at 5:30 o'clock each Tuesday afternoon.

Credit Women's Club Gives $50 to Red Cross

Atlanta Credit Women's Club, energetic band of young women who meet once a month for breakfast at 7 o'clock before going to their day's work in downtown business offices, has sent in a contribution of $50 to the Red Cross war fund.

These young women, moreover, all are enlisted in Red Cross classes. They attend classes after hours of hard work in responsible jobs, for which they deserve much credit—credit to the credit women—say their Red Cross instructors.

Mrs. Candler Aiding Red Cross Work

Mrs. Marian Candler is among volunteer workers who are regularly contributing their share to the success of Red Cross work in Atlanta. She has been assisting in the downtown emergency headquarters of the Red Cross at 61 Forsyth street and also aiding in the evening with the first aid division.

The first aid division is one of the busiest in the entire Red Cross organization because it has undertaken the task of trying to train virtually the entire adult population of Atlanta in safety measures as air raid attack procedures for injured persons.

Men's Syrian Club Donates War Fund

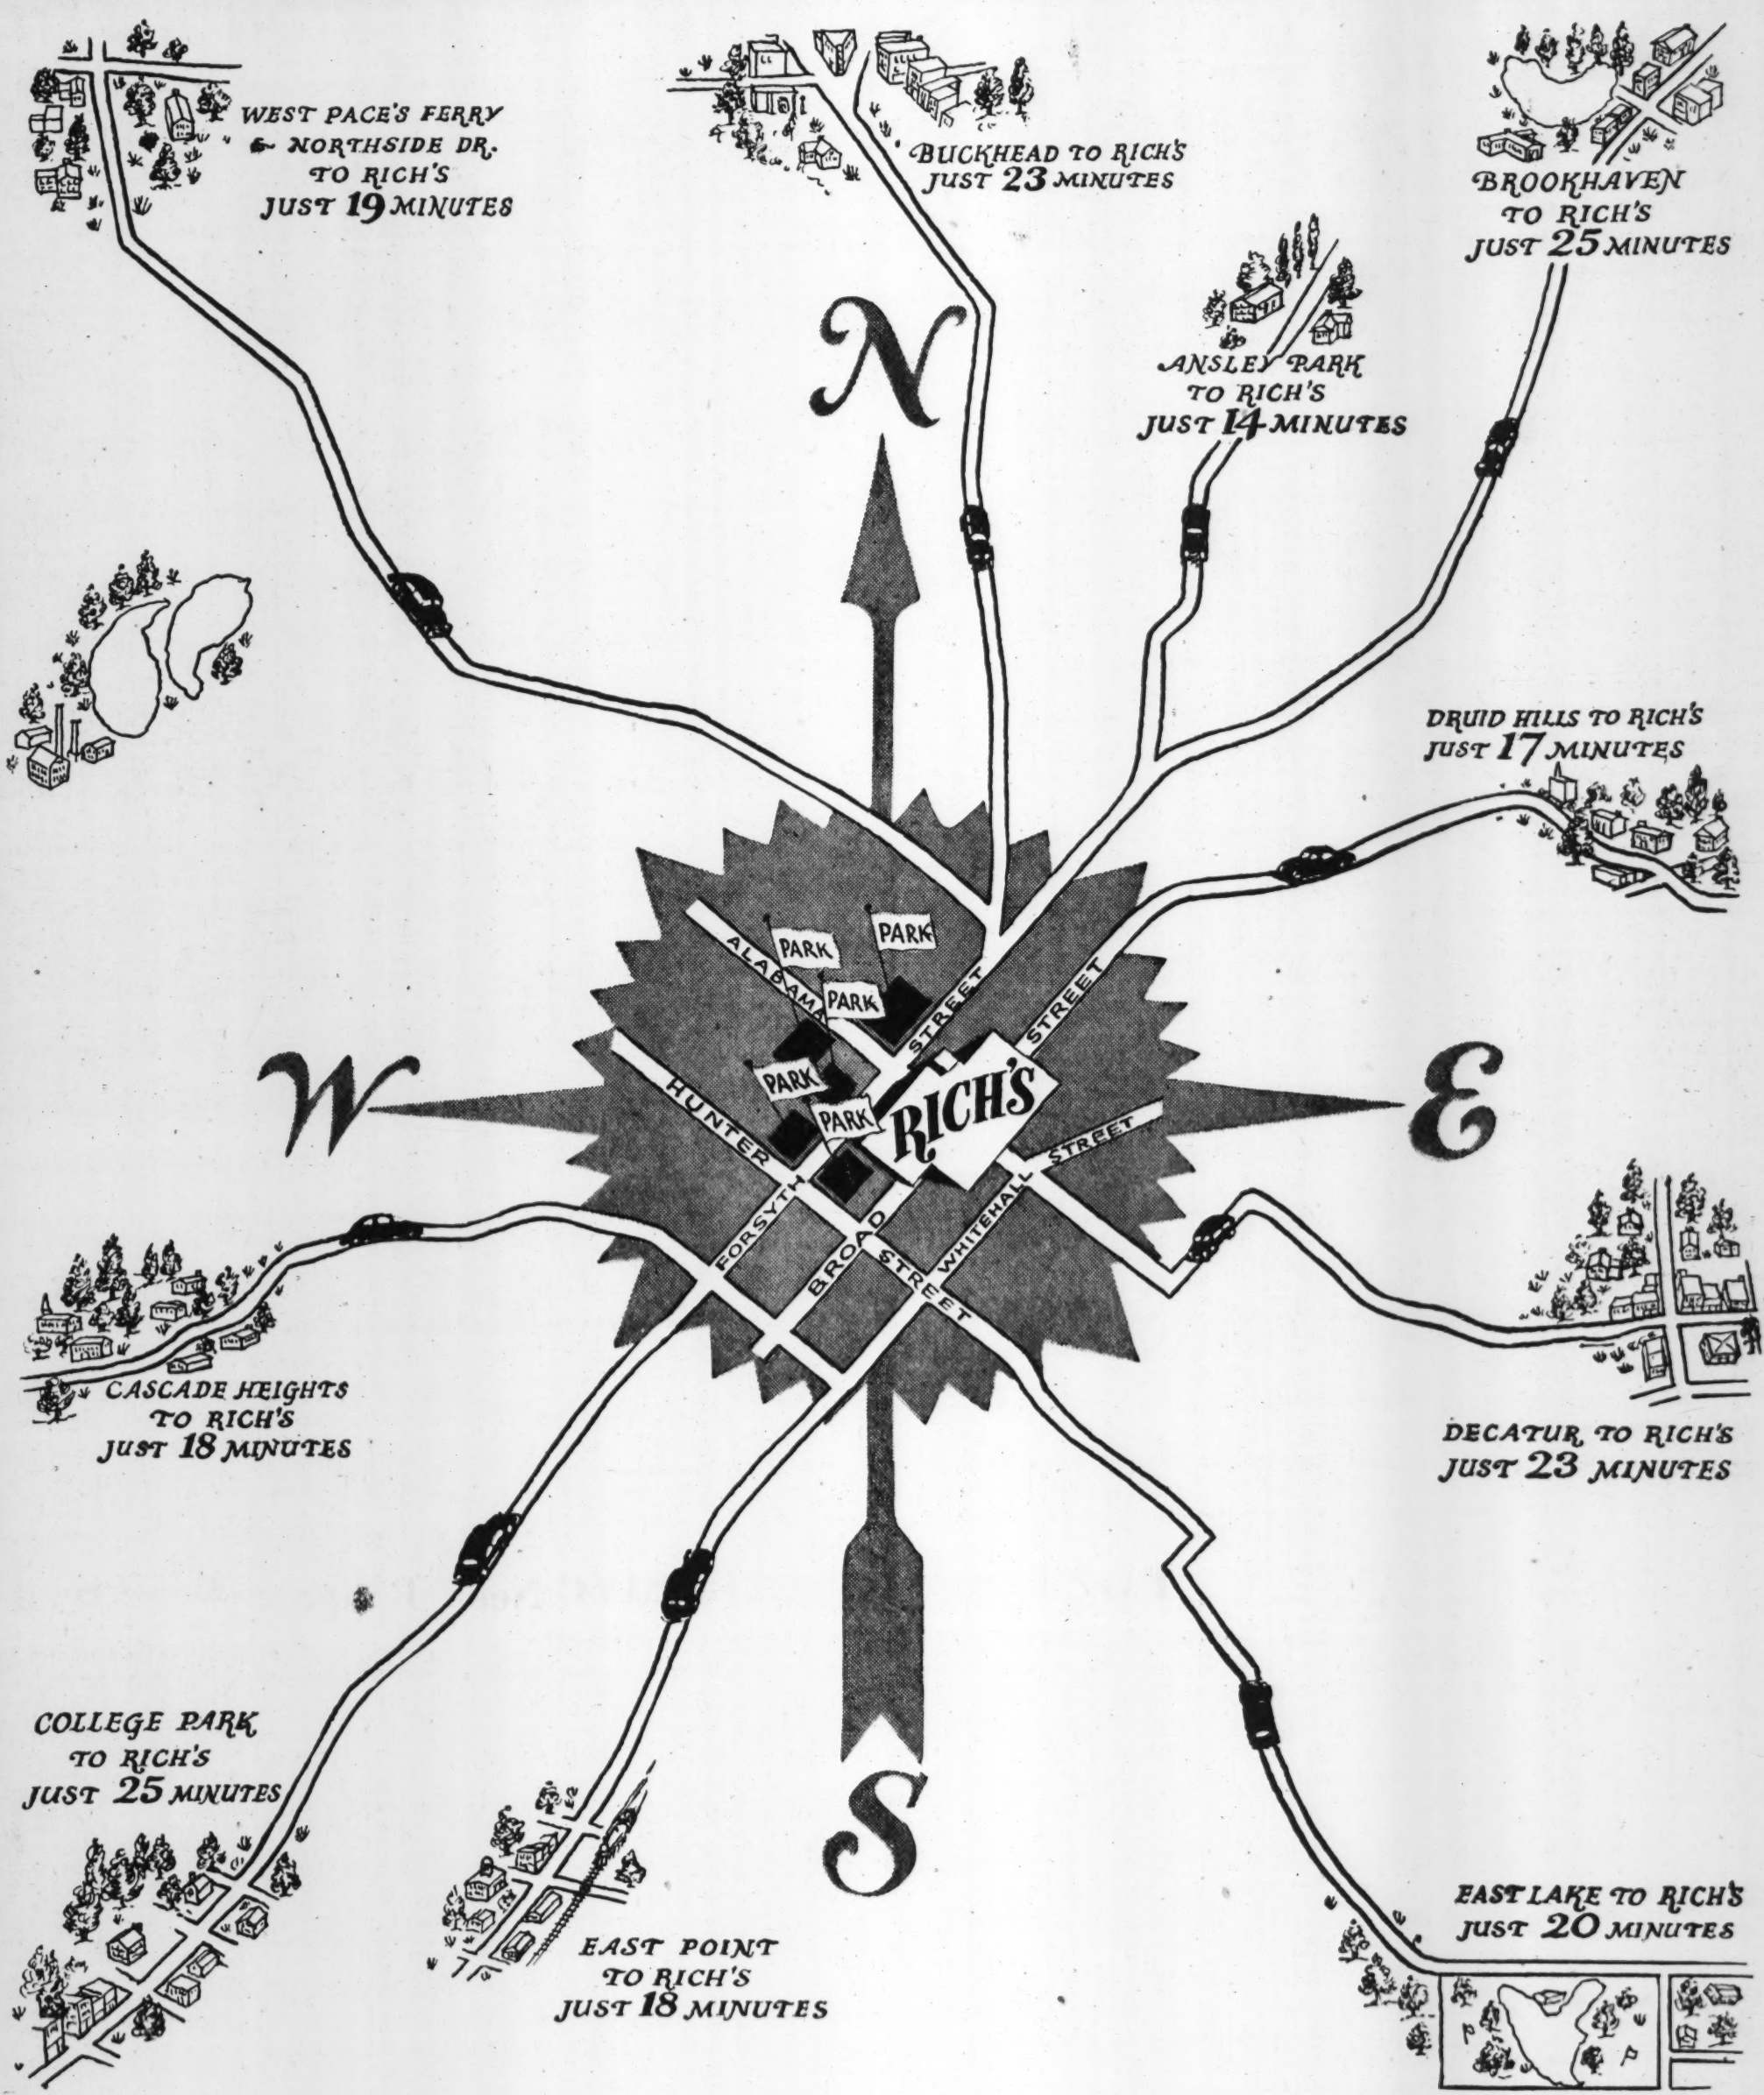

Young Syrian girls danced with more than usual vim at the dance given recently by the Young Men's Syrian Club, of which Nick Azar is president. They knew the proceeds of the dance were going to the Red Cross war fund. They were delighted when the treasurer of the club, George Najour, turned in $263.75 to the Red Cross war fund.

Meet The Champ

Anybody who ever knocked an eight-ball in a side pocket knows who Charles C. Peterson is. If they don't, and if knocking eight balls in side pockets is a favorite pastime, they should make his acquaintance.

He has been, for 10 these many years, the national trick shot champion of billiards, to use the proper term, or pocket pool, as the boys say around the corner leather snood emporium.

He's 63 now and I guess he reflects it in his face, being somewhat baldish and showing a wrinkle here and there. But you'd never know it, watching him control a billiard ball as if it were on a string. (He has a boy in the service.)

CHARLES PETERSON

Charles Peterson came by for his annual visit yesterday. He is touring key colleges and all the service camps in the southern territory. Willie Hoppe is making a similar tour of northern colleges and camps. Peterson originally trained Hoppe.

"I'm not as young as I used to be," Peterson observed. "Other day the commandant at Ft. Bliss asked me to work in an extra exhibition. I hadn't planned to appear there. But I didn't want to disappoint the boys and in order to keep on schedule, I put on 17 shows in a day and a half. Each show ran over an hour."

Included in the trick shot repertoire are such stunts as "Keep 'em flying," "Over the Top," "West Point shot," etc. He does such things as hop a ball in a water glass, into silk toppers and cause a silver dollar to roll back to him when contacted by well-applied english.

"These things are not too easy. I average an hour and a half on the shows. But the boys enjoy it and I never turn down a chance to entertain them," the veteran player asserted.

Co-Eds Interested

Mothers used to shudder to think little Willie might grow up and frequent a pool room. Many evil things were associated with such an influence, and properly. But times have changed. Co-eds are playing billiards nowadays, for the first time in the game's history.

The old rowdy atmosphere is no longer associated with the game. It is not uncommon to see ladies playing at all the better places.

Many colleges included billiards among the extra-curricular activities. In an annual telegraphic meet, for instance, Florida recently won the straight rail championship. The Fighting Gators have a union building, along with North Carolina and Davidson. Here at Tech the game is played in the Y. M. C. A. Mr. Peterson gave an exhibition there the other day.

There are 264 billiard-minded universities in this country that Trick Shot Champion Peterson has visited. On his current tour he will give shows in 125 camps and colleges. That's pretty strenuous going for a man of 63.

"At Georgia Tech I stressed geometry of angles and bisecting angles," Mr. Peterson pointed out. "That's principally what billiards amounts to."

"What about hitting the ball?"

"That's really the hardest thing in billiards—hitting it as nearly center as possible. One should keep the cue down and follow through. . . bridge must be kept firm and solid, with no loose space between thumb and forefinger. . . Among mistakes players make is playing with too long a bridge and holding cue too close to its butt. . . It should be held at balance. . . Otherwise, you get a pumphant motion that's hard to overcome."

A Class Apart

Jumping from billiards to Cornelius Warmerdam is, perhaps, a rather disconnected achievement, but Frank Drake, who annually conducts The Constitution's music festival, just talked us into it.

"This Warmerdam pole-vaults about a foot higher than any other living human, doesn't he?" Drake asked, knowing perfectly well that he does.

"Well, then, suppose other sports champions performed as well. . . That would make champion golfers shoot in the low 60s and 400 hitters in baseball would be as common as flowers in May. And a star football player who didn't gain 2,000 or 3,000 yards a season would be a sissy," Drake insisted.

Our Music Festival editor may have something there. . . and I won't wait outside until he buries it. Let's look further into the matter.

Taking it into the realm of music, it would make the trumpet player blend two notes at the same puff, and cause a soloist hitting high C to scale a few higher notes with no extra effort.

Drake's thought has unlimited possibilities, but I have neither the time nor the space to exhaust it. I am inclined to take it by the throat and throttle it.

Suffice to say, Warmerdam is the reigning track and field sensation—in spite of the fact that the honor recently was accorded to a runner named MacMitchell.

I never heard of MacMitchell dressing and returning to the track in time to see the runner-up finish. . . as Paavo Nurmi used to do. He'd have to be this good to be in Warmerdam's class as a champion.

Rickey Celebrates 25 Years Of Regular Duty in Baseball

ST. LOUIS, March 7.—(AP)—One of baseball's most vital personalities, Branch Rickey, of the St. Louis Cardinals, looked back today on 25 years of service with the team, covering its rise from cellar poverty to pennant riches.

Employees, in a surprise gathering in Rickey's office, presented him a unique watch to commemorate his silver anniversary. There are 25 links in the wrist band, each engraved to represent a year of service.

Rickey came to the Cardinals in March, 1917, during the club's period of worst financial distress. Things were so bad, for a time, that Rickey doubled as president and field manager of the team.

But his inauguration of the farm system, beginning in 1921, soon provided the Cardinals with a stream of youthful stars and since 1925 Rickey has been able to devote himself entirely to his duties as vice president and general manager.

In a speech of thanks, Rickey declared the success of the Cardinals was the result of the combined efforts of his fellow employees over the years.

He named several who received their early training with the Cardinals and now are active in various capacities in organized baseball. Among them are Warren Giles, general manager of the Cincinnati Reds; Larry McPhail, president of the Brooklyn Dodgers; George Trautman, president of the American Association, and William O. DeWitt, general manager of the St. Louis Browns.

The Rhymer Wins Widener Handicap by a Head

Best Seller 2d,
Olympus 3d;
Favorites Lag

Alsab 5th, Challedon
6th, Market Wise
8th, Dit 16th.

By GAYLE TALBOT.

MIAMI, Fla., March 7.—(AP)—One of the most dramatic stories in thoroughbred history reached its storybook climax here today when Mrs. Payne Whitney's The Rhymer, the "blood transfusion horse," came up with his closing strides to win the Widener Handicap, richest race of the winter season, at Hialeah Park.

Nobody had given The Rhymer a look-in on the first prize of $53,950. The handsome chestnut, which only two years ago was regarded as a hopeless invalid, wasn't considered in the same class with the group of great stakes horses running today—Market Wise, Midland, Challedon, Attention, Alsab and the others.

But when the field of 17 had completed the mile and a quarter route of the Widener, the frenzied cheers of a crowd of 25,048, it was Mrs. Whitney's pet that had his head out in front of Colonel E. R. Bradley's Best Seller, the second horse, while the star runners were nowhere. Market Wise, the favorite, never was in the race, and only little Alsab of the "name" horses gave his owner a run for the money.

TRANSFUSION PONY.

The Rhymer was bred by Mrs. Whitney's Greentree Stables, and horsemen say she formed a particular attachment for him, to the extent that when he became a very seriously sick two-year-old she insisted he be given a blood transfusion, a thing unheard of at that time. At any rate, he recovered to run a grand race under the skillful handling of the veteran Eddie Arcaro today and fully repay his owner for her affection.

The few who had their money on the game outsider realized the big reward of $32.80 for each $2 mutual ticket. Best Seller, which led the procession most of the way and yielded to The Rhymer only in a final dramatic rush for the wire, returned $53.20 for the place. Another rank outsider, Olympus, was third a half length further back, paying $12 for a show ticket.

Seldom has a field of great horses taken a more surprising beating.

From the instant that Starter George Cassidy sent them off to an almost perfect start from two sets of stalls, none of the favorites ever gave his backer a real hope.

OUR BOOTS FOURTH.

Fourth by a length in the big jam at the finish was Our Boots. Fifth was Alsab, the great little two-year-old king of last year, competing in a field of older and bigger horses. He justified the decision of his owner, Al Sabath, in starting him, even though he couldn't quite come through for his thousands of admirers in the stands. As the field rounded down the stretch, Alsab swung far to the outside and gained on the leaders at every jump. He looked like a cinch, and the cry went up "Alsab's got it." Just when they were about a furlong from home, Alsab actually stuck his game head in front for a moment, but that was all he had.

HERE'S THE FINISH.

Back of Alsab in this order, finished Challedon, Get Off, Market Wise, Midland, Gramps, Pictor, Attention, Pomayya, Waller, Porter's Cap, Dit and Great Union. Almost any of them was supposed to be a better horse than The Rhymer, which was beaten only three days ago in a Grade B handicap. Rider Arcaro, in fact, was not too enthusiastic about The Rhymer when he was over, apparently feeling that his "Arcaro" horsemanship had been quite a big factor in the triumph.

The Rhymer drew the number one pole position and was off to a good fourth under Arcaro's spirited riding. At the half mile he had fallen far back to 13th, taking quarters was ninth. At the mile he was sixth—still nobody paying him any attention—and the same rounding into the turn. From there on it was between him, Best Seller, Alsab, Our Boots and Olympus. They looked like a team of fire horses in the last 100 yards. But just before the pay off wire Arcaro shoved his horse in front and held him there by main strength.

CRACKER STANDBYS—Floyd Stromme and Pep Rambert, pausing for a cooling drink, are two of the right-handers counted upon to make the Crackers contenders again. Stromme came to the Crackers late last season and was handicapped by a leg injury. Rambert was an effective starter and good in a relief role. Between them they should produce more than 30 victories this summer.

S. E. C. Delays Final Decision On Freshmen

Executive Committee Okays Plans To Regulate All Recruiting.

NEW ORLEANS, March 7.—(AP)

The Southeastern Conference's executive committee today approved plans to regulate recruiting of athletes, but it bypassed the question of freshman eligibility and declared the proposal to abandon intercollegiate sports in Mississippi was "not our business."

The committee, in a special session on wartime problems, agreed "in principle" to rules requiring member schools to give prospects written explanations of scholarships tendered them; forbidding a member to approach a boy already pledged to another; and establishing a "cooling off" period in which prospects would be let alone to make their decisions.

It was voted to name a subcommittee to prepare amendments to the constitution embodying those rules, to be submitted to the general membership April 18 in Birmingham.

Left to that general meeting was the question of allowing freshmen or transfer students to play varsity sports. The acting secretary, Commissioner Mike Conner, was instructed to notify the members that any proposal for such provisions must be submitted by a member in writing three weeks before that meeting.

Conner read at today's session letters from conference schools not represented here, expressing differing views on the subject.

Conner and several others connected with the conference have predicted the eligibility rules would be relaxed during the war. The question of Mississippi wartime sports abandonment, now before that state's board of trustees of institutions of higher learning, did not come up for discussion. The only mention was a statement by Dr. Rufus C. Harris, president of Tulane University and of the conference, which was approved by the committee.

Atlanta Youth Stars As Tarheel Swimmer

Denman Hammond, Son of Late Managing Editor, Is Rough on Records.

By JOSEPH A. LESLIE III.

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., March 7.—Denman Hammond, Atlanta boy, has a habit of breaking records and helping to break them.

The 19-year-old sophomore star of the University of North Carolina's Blue Dolphins has hung up some kind of a new mark nearly every time he has hit the pool this year and it is pretty certain that he will hang up many more.

Last week Hammond set a dual meet record against Washington and Lee University by swimming the 150-yard backstroke course in 1:55.5. Earlier he broke the National Intercollegiate long course record in the 150-yard backstroke, set a new pool and C. A. A. record in the 150-meter backstroke, and swam on relay teams which also set new pool and C. A. A. U. marks.

Denny's big day this year was February 6, when he swam in competition with Rider College and emerged with the National Intercollegiate 150-yard backstroke record. A week before the Rider meet, Denny swam the 150-meter backstroke against V. M. I. and as he passed the 150-yard marker Coach Dick Jamerson noticed that the prize backstroke was only two-tenths of a second short of the national record.

Exactly one week later, the versatile youth figured in three record-breaking events. Entered first in the 150-meter medley relay, he helped to set a new pool and C. A. A. U. record. Half an hour later he swam a record smashing 150-meter backstroke race. And to climax his day's performance he swam as anchor man on the 200-meter freestyle relay team which also turned in a new pool and C. A. A. U. mark.

As a freshman, Denny started on the freestyle distance events. He switched to the backstroke and serving as captain of the freshman squad was awarded the Dick Jamerson trophy, a plaque given each year to the outstanding freshman swimmer.

At 16, his junior year at Darlington School in Rome, Ga., he held the Georgia I. A. A. 100-yard freestyle record. At 17 he started in on the backstroke and in the same year set a new Georgia state interscholastic record in the 100-yard backstroke. After the state meets, Denny went to Philadelphia for the National Interscholastic meets and there placed fifth among the nation's best performers in the 100-yard backstroke and the 50-yard freestyle.

Denny is the son of the late P. W. Hammond, formerly managing editor of The Atlanta Constitution.

Rookie Howard Long Must Retake Physical

Rest of Squad Reports Today; Richards Satisfied With Progress Made Despite Bad Weather.

By JOHNNY BRADBERRY.

ST. AUGUSTINE, Fla., March 7.—The Crackers closed their first week of spring training with a long workout today and Manager Paul Richards announced he was "satisfied" with progress made during the preliminary conditioning session for pitchers and catchers.

The remainder of the squad will report tomorrow and all-round drills will get under way Monday.

ANOTHER LOSS.

As the club went through its last practice of the first week, one of the most promising looking rookie hurlers was absent. Howard Long, who Richards said looked better than any southpaw in camp, received a call from his draft board in Gastonia, N. C., for a physical examination.

Long left this morning. He previously was classified in 1-B by the selective service board on account of his teeth, but will now go in to 1-A if he passes the physical.

So that just about lets Long out. He won 16 and lost only four for Greenville last season and was given a real chance to stick with the Atlanta club.

That makes two of the best looking pitchers in camp headed for the Army. The other is Milton Rosenstein who expects to be called on either March or April 18.

SHAPING UP FINE.

Despite the bad weather which harassed drills the first part of the week, the Crackers are rounding into condition. The boys have worked out every day, rain or not, and they are just now getting the kinks and soreness out of their muscles. The pitchers will be ready to put something on the ball by the time the first exhibition game is played on March 15 against Birmingham in Palatka.

Weather for the last two practice sessions was near perfect, and Richards is taking every advantage of it. He drills the boys right through the hottest part of the day—from 10:30 until about 3:30—and the sun melts off excess poundage and loosens pitching arms.

It is doubtful that the club could be much further advanced if it had been treated to good weather every day.

RAMBERT, STROMME LEAD.

Pep Rambert and Floyd Stromme have been setting a hot pace for the youngsters to follow. These two veterans are working as hard as anybody in camp and have a lot more spirit about it than many. If they both come through as expected, the Crackers will be hard to handle.

Larry Miller, too, is trying hard on his comeback, but whether an arm operation left him all right remains to be seen. Anyway, everybody is pulling for him and it would be nice to hear that shell whistle coming from the third base coach's box during games at Ponce de Leon. He hasn't forgotten that.

Hammond Sets Swimming Mark

CHAPEL HILL, N. C., March 7.—Rolling up a new record time score of 72½ points and setting three new Southern Conference long course records, North Carolina's squad easily won the 12th annual Southern Conference swimming meet here this afternoon.

Duke finished second with 50½ points, N. C. State took third place with 30 points, and Virginia Tech was last with 25 points. In Friday's preliminaries Denman Hammond, Tarheel sophomore, set a new conference record of 1:54.2 in the backstroke.

Georgia Tainter Wins 3rd Crown

ORMOND BEACH, Fla., March 7.—(AP)—Youthful Georgia Tainter, of Fargo, N. D., captured her third major title of the Florida winter golf circuit today by winning the 17th annual south Atlantic women's tournament with a 3-and-2 victory over Jane Crum, of Orangeburg, S. C., in the final round.

The North Dakota girl was only two over even fours for the 18 holes required to win and if she had played out the bye holes in par would have scored a 74.

Evening College Wins Mat Title

A scrappy Georgia Evening College wrestling team won the state crown and placed three men as state champions at the Y. M. C. A. yesterday. Total scores were: Georgia Evening College 30; Tech High 27, and Atlanta Y. M. C. A. 12.

Emerging as individual champs were: Roy Adams (H. S.), Ray Adams (Y. M. C. A.), Pat Cooke (Y. M. C. A.), Mike Varr (Mercer), G. L. Thomas (G. E. C.), Henry James (T. H. S.), Frank Hamilton (G. E. C.), and Pete Devita (G. E. C.). Runners-up were: Roy G. G. (Y. M. C. A.), Jewett (T. H. S.), Frank Hamilton (G. E. C.), Charlie Goodlin (Y. M. C. A.), Gene Randall (Y. M. C. A.), Hubert Powell (T. H. S.), Sparky Anglin (Fort Benning), Walter Miller (Y. M. C. A.).

Georgia Evening College meets the Atlanta Y. M. C. A. next Saturday night in another important match at the Georgia Evening College.

Duke Smashes State in Finals

RALEIGH, N. C., March 7.—(AP)—Duke University's Blue Devils, demonstrating conclusively that they're head and shoulders above all basketball competition in this section, tonight defeated North Carolina State College, 45-34, in the finals of the Southern Conference basketball tournament. The championship was Duke's second in two years.

State fought gamely all the way, and played the Blue Devils on virtually even terms during the first half. But Duke's two-team offense, featuring experience and talent, just plainly wore the Terrors out in the second chapter.

OUTSIDER TAKES WINTER'S RICHEST RACE—Greentree Stable's The Rhymer, a $32.80 for $2 outsider, won the $50,000 added

Widener Handicap at Hialeah yesterday. In a dramatic finish, Best Seller (on rail) was second, Olympus (14) third and Our Boots (5) fourth. Others: Alsab (11), Challedon (2), Get Off (6), Market Wise (4), last in picture, Gramps (10), and Midland (hidden behind).

Bulldog Elevens To Battle on Saturday

Sinkwich, Perl, Southworth
Letchas, Todd Shuffles Cards
On One Team For Best Deal

'G' Day Grid Game Is Scheduled To Start at 3 O'Clock.

By F. M. WILLIAMS.
ATHENS, Ga., March 7.—Squads, as equally divided as possible when there's only one Frankie Sinkwich around, were announced today by Coach Wallace Butts for next Saturday's "G" Day football game, which will officially bring to an end spring grid drills.

The game will be played under regular conditions and will start at 3 o'clock. Admission will be 50 cents per person, proceeds going to the Georgia Boosters' Club.

Largely because it will have Sinkwich, the "Red" squad will be favored to win the "G" Day game, but the "Whites" have plenty of potential power and four more men on its squad, and the additional reserve strength may be the difference.

There are 26 "Whites" and 22 "Reds."

Sinkwich is listed at tailback on the favored eleven along with Al Perl, a promising youngster up from G. M. C. At wingback will be Gus Letchas, the lad who was ineligible last season, and Jack Pounds, a sophomore from Atlanta. Jim Todd, a veteran from Laurens, S. C., will handle the fullback duties all alone.

For the "Whites," Charley Trippi and Jerry Nunnally will be teamed at tailback and wingback, with Mell Bray and Kenneth Keuper sharing fullback honors. Rysals Lee will be Trippi's understudy, and dependable Andy Dudish will help Nunnally at wingback.

Lamar Davis, shifted to end last week after playing two seasons at wingback, is a member of the "Reds," but last year's two regular flankmen, George Poschner and Van Davis, both are listed on the "Whites."

The "White" squad follows:
Ends—Lamar Davis, Myrus Maffett, Alf Anderson, Morris Phelps, Mack Dagwell and "Red" Vickery.
Tackles—Everett Horne, Dick Richardson, Garland Williams, Gene Ellison and Bob Ross.
Guards—Mike Caston, Carl Grate, Lou Marbury and Willard Boyd.
Center—Clyde Ehrhardt and Francis Blocking Backs—Walter Maguire, Harold Maguire and Norman Harrison.
Tailbacks—Rysals Lee, Charley Trippi, Wingbacks—Andy Dudish and Jerry Nunnally.
Fullbacks—Mell Bray and Kenneth Keuper.

The "Red" squad:
Ends—Clinton Strother, George Poschner, Van Davis, Bob Reynolds and Joe Tackles—Ardie McClure, Vernon Peters, Lou Marbury and Willard Boyd.
Guards—Jim Lee, Clarence Hyatt, and J. P. Miller.
Center—Bill Godwin and Frank Plant.
Blocking Backs—Bob Landry, Joe Pounds, and Jim Todd.
Tailbacks—Frankie Sinkwich and Al Perl.
Wingbacks—Gus Letchas and Jack Pounds.
Fullbacks—Jim Todd.

Two of last season's brightest stars, Guard Walter Ruark and Fullback Dick McPhee, will miss the game due to operations. Ruark underwent an operation recently for an injured elbow and McPhee has not participated in athletics since being operated on for appendicitis after the Florida game last year.

Organization of leagues, plans for the coming season, which will begin earlier than usual this year, and discussion of some changes in policy will be discussed.

The federation has a plan by which it hopes to dispense with franchise fees and charges for registering players. Watch charms and trophies free of charge to league winners is also planned. Tommy Reeder, secretary of the local organization, announced.

The annual city tournament will be held in August, with the winners to have all expenses paid to the national meet in Youngstown. Only federation teams will be permitted to enter the city meet. Fulton Bag was the first winner in 1939, and represented Atlanta in Washington. They also won last year and went to the national in Youngstown.

Mitchell ousted Murray Cleveland, of New Orleans, 15-9, 15-2, while John Ager, of Birmingham, defeated Caffery, 8-15, 15-12, 15-12. In other quarter-final play W. J. Graham, of Atlanta, upset George Poole, of Birmingham, 17-18, 15-3, 15-10, and George Harris, of Charlotte, downed Lem Moody, of Savannah, Ga., 15-8, 15-6.

League Title
John McCauley's Walco girls, recent winners of the State Independent basketball championship, added the Walthour Girls' League title to their collection by defeating the Georgia Power Trojans, 31 to 26, in a playoff last night at Russell High.

Sewell Service triumphed over Columbia High, of Lake City, Fla., 26 to 18.

The Trojan-Walco game developed into a real ball game in the second half, after the winners threatened to make a runaway by pulling out into an early eight-point lead in the opening quarter.

Alabelle Conner, Walco's all-state forward, grabbed off high scoring honors with 15 points. Harwell caged 11 to lead the losers.

Walco will wind up its season this weekend by competing in the Alabama State meet at Lanett, Alabama.

Sewell's win was accomplished after a real tussle. The younger Lake City players stayed in the game for three quarters. They managed to knot the count at 16-16 in the second half before Register, star forward, went out with a sprained ankle. Sewell's Sara Killian was the big star of the game, with 19 points.

By JUDSON AILEY.
ST. PETERSBURG, Fla., March 7. (AP)—Billy Southworth is a fellow who likes to give his Cards a good shuffle before starting to deal, but when the National League begins next month he'll have his aces on top.

The mighty mile who runs the St. Louis Cardinals said as much today on the occasion of his first exhibition game with the New York Yankees.

Recalling that everyone became royally confused last spring when he pulled all sorts of infield combinations out of a hat for the Grapefruit games, Southworth suggested that no one should take his shuffling too seriously this year.

"I knew all along what my infield was going to be last year and except for first base I know about what it will be this season. But I'm going to give every boy a chance and I want to get as much of a look at these youngsters as possible."

"As a result you may see me doing some strange things in our exhibition games."

"For instance, I want to give this boy, Bob Blattner, as much work as I can. I even thought I am figuring on Frank Crespi for my regular second baseman and Marty Marion for short. So I may play Blattner half a game at second and half a game at short. He'll get nine innings of work. I'll be at second, and also sharing with Steve Mesner, and Bert Haas and Marion battling with Eddie Lake for the shortstop berth."

These switches were made in all sorts of combinations throughout the exhibition series for two weeks with the St. Augustine meet, which starts Tuesday. From there they will go to Pinehurst for the annual North Carolina event.

Besides the "name players" several other Atlantans plan the trip to Florida. Mrs. Claude Sweeney, Mrs. W. R. Pollard, Mrs. George Lowman, Mrs. O. B. Keeler and Miss Llewellyn Wilburn are among those planning to go.

Louise headed south Friday and the others expect to leave today. Among competitors will be Georgia Tainter and Jane Crum, finalists at Ormond last week.

PINEHURST, N. C., March 7.—Five holes in one have been made on Pinehurst courses this season, the latest this week by Mrs. Martin Sweeney, of New York, wife of the manager of the Commodore hotel. Mrs. Sweeney holed out at the 145-yard 14th on the number three course.

Glenn Miller, orchestra leader, obtained an ace on the ninth hole of the championship course recently. Rev. A. J. McKelway, of the Pinehurst Community church, registered the first ace this season on the difficult eighth hole.

Others to hole one stroke were Mrs. Thomas Bean, Haddonfield, N. J., the 18th on number one course, and James Nicolls, Pinehurst professional, on the 17th on number two.

HAVANA, March 7. (AP)—Cuban All-Stars did some magnificent fielding today, to beat the Brooklyn Dodgers, 4 to 2, and give themselves a two-to-one standing in the spring training series. A double-header is set for tomorrow.

Pee Wee Reese was robbed of a homer in the third, when his long drive to left field was snagged as it cleared a fence by Crespo. The Cubans on other occasions likewise got themselves out of jams by fine fielding.

They broke the tie in the ninth to score two. Joe Medwick showed something of his old form in the fifth by tripping to score both of the Dodgers' runs.

Shi Sees Fine Club for Next Season as He

By CHARLIE ROBERTS.

A record number of gridiron hopefuls, 126, came out for spring football practice at Tech High when Coach Allen Shi sounded the call. The weather man has conspired to keep them indoors this week, but he hasn't been able to hide the Smithie coach's jubilation over prospects for next season.

"We really should have a fine ball club. Some of our best men are back, and some of the newcomers look like they have what it takes," Shi elaborated.

A first-class veteran backfield made up of George Vlass, All-City Fullback Charlie Woodward, Grady Boles and Blocking Back Donnie King is looking great. Walter Camp, Harry Bates and Fred Beiser appear capable of doing their share of oval toting with a bit more experience.

"Nobody is likely to have a better pair of guards than John Bond and Bill Cullins," Shi boasts, "and that tackle crop doesn't look so bad, either." Old hands available for tackle posts are Coley Whitaker, Jack Whitaker, Howard Gossett and Bob Mullins.

"Jack Greer and Ray Cheney will make me a pretty fair pair of country ends," the Blacksmith mentor continues, "and Ralph Brannon is a good prospect for one of the flanks, as is Coogan Williams, who is showing up well at guard."

Shi keeps the grin on his face as he talks of a new pair who will be battling for the center position, Eugene and James Mock.

The rotund Eighth Street coach really goes for his new team in a big way. He calls the tackling "improved," and the blocking, which wasn't too hot last season, he tags as "very good." The boys are in such good shape they already have had one scrimmage. It looks like a happy fall out on Blacksmith Row.

Sportsmen Facing 'Holiday'

LAST POINT OF SEASON—The two pointers operating ahead of Major Trammell Scott, president of the Georgia Wildlife Federation, made their last find of the season perfect. The dog in the foreground is honoring his mate's point on the edge of a south Georgia pond. The season on quail closed March 1.

Priorities Hit Hunting and Angling Group

Game and Fish Expected To Increase During Indefinite Respite.

By JOHN MARTIN.
"Where do we go from here?" This is what Georgia sportsmen are wondering as they observe developments along the shortage front.
You might say the answer is simple: "Stay at home; cast your pet flies on the lawn; and aim your trusty fowling piece at imaginary targets."
This is not as easily done as said, however, looking at it one way. On the other hand, it perhaps will be the limit of indulgence for many fishermen and hunters who, unaffected by restrictions, would be in the woods and waters.

FIREARMS FROZEN.
The newest development, following the "no fire" era, is the freeze edict on firearms. The order prohibiting sale of "all firearms firing explosive cartridges and propelling a metal bullet or shot" went into effect February 27. This includes rifles, pistols, revolvers and shotguns—everything that will shoot except the bow and arrow, and the air gun. Used firearms are not included in the law. Nor does it affect ammunition. However, M. O. Briggs, Western-Winchester representative here, said yesterday that shell jobbers and dealers had been limited to only 1 1/2 per cent of 1940 sales for the first quarter.
"What the next quota will be, I don't know," Briggs said.

Anglers have not been dealt such a severe blow—not yet, anyway. Everett Roach, the fly fisherman, said that there already was a scarcity in steel casting rods. And inasmuch as only one manufacturer in this country makes the trout hook, he predicts a scarcity in these.

This is viewed as a blessing in disguise. True sportsmen have long frowned on gang hooks for taking fish. So the big trouble in fishing will be transportation.

LICENSES TO DROP.
The State Wildlife Division, which issues licenses to hunt and fish, doesn't like to think about it, but indications are that revenue from hunting and fishing licenses will further decline this year. They suffered a drop in 1941, and with many sportsmen observing a holiday in 1942, decline except an additional decline can be expected.

There is one thing that tends to offset this gloomy outlook. Conceding that there will be less hunting and fishing, it is logical to assume that game fish will increase, particularly in remote areas which cannot be reached on short auto trips. The same applies to game birds and animals.

So, looking at it from a strict conservation angle, the enforced "sportsmen's holiday" should not only long way toward restoring depleted areas. The constant drain on new game crops should not be as severe as it has been.

Despite the impending shortages, there is no need for sportsmen to rush in and buy extra equipment. Stocking up on supplies for normal demands and even if you have the equipment, how are you going to get there to use it?

Trout Streams In N. Carolina Open April 20
RALEIGH, N. C., March 7.—Many streams in western North Carolina's Mt. Mitchell and Daniel Boone wildlife areas will be open this season for the first time since the 1940 floods. State Game Commissioner Hinton James revealed with the announcement that the general trout season would open April 15 and extend through August 31.

Commissioner James also announced that the Davidson river, one of the best known trout streams in the Pisgah National Forest, would be open from April 20 through August 31. The Davidson previously has been open only on specified dates during the season.

The trout season in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park will extend from May 15 until August 31, and the season for small-mouth bass in park streams from June 16 through August 31. Creel limits and the regulation permitting use of artificial bait only remain unchanged.

Special regulations also will prevail in the Pisgah and Nantahala national forests, which are under co-operative jurisdiction of federal and state protectors.

Fishing will be permitted in western North Carolina's numerous power lakes subject to prevailing defense regulations.

Scotch Women Spoiling Him, Atlantan Says

C. W. Jones Writes of Experience in British Isles.

American women must learn to polish the boots of their men friends, see to it that they are comfortably tucked in bed at night, with hot-water bottles at the head and foot of the bed, and then have the men's boots warmed bright and early the next morning when the man arises from his downy couch if they want to keep up with their Scotch sisters.
That's the opinion of C. W. Jones, former Atlantan who is now a member of the British Civilian Technical Corps and is stationed at Hartsburg, Worcester.

Jones, in a letter written to friends on The Constitution, expresses the opinion that no king could receive better attention and service than the Americans are receiving in the homes where they are billeted.

"Bad weather never halts a Scotch woman," his letter said. "They put on their boots, if they have a pair, and just go ahead, regardless of whether it is rain, sleet or snow. Those who are less fortunate and do not have a pair of boots just go ahead as determinedly as their more fortunate sisters."

"They go out and stand in long lines waiting for ration cards, then they take whatever piece of meat the butcher has, and do not quibble over the freshness of the vegetables or the eggs. Three times each week they are issued fresh bread, and get about two eggs each month."

"They are hard-working people and their homes are spotless. Each morning they get on their knees and scrub the front doorstep, polish the brass door knocker and polish the metalwork in the fireplace."

"When I come home late at night, I find my slippers in front of the fire, and a light burning in my bedroom. As I am getting into the bed, the good lady of the house brings me the hot-water bottles, tucks me in just as she would her own baby and, when satisfied of my comfort, she puts out the light and retires to her room."

"I'll be spoiled to death by all this attention whenever I get back to the states."

Riding the Circuit All Over Georgia

BY THOS. M. ELLIOTT

I Lost My Head.
Last Sunday this column appeared in The Constitution with the above familiar head cut that has been in use since World War I. I lost my head on account of the makeup difficulties that arise in arranging the pages of matter and advertising. Of course, it's a serious matter to lose one's head, but I didn't think it would create such a commotion. I find it rather hard to get along without some kind of a head. One reader outside Atlanta told me he looked through the paper four times before he found the Circuit Rider. A good-looking woman said it just didn't seem natural to read the column without the familiar head cut; said it was like eating eggs without salt and pepper, or kissing a man who had no moustache. Anyhow, we'll try to keep the head from now on, and try to keep it level and cool.

Dr. Anthony Eats Onions.
I wasn't going to say anything about it, but he himself has told it publicly. So I reckon it's all right to mention it. Dr. Bascom Anthony, well-known and greatly loved Georgia Methodist preacher, says he eats onions. He didn't say how often he eats 'em; but did say, "When I want to smell bad, I eat onions."

This onion-eating business is a serious thing. It got Napoleon Bonaparte in trouble with his stomach. And I reckon that's the reason you always see him in his pictures with his hand on his tummy, as if it were full of onions and causing him pain. Some say his pictures show him scratching crotchies. But crotchies had not been invented in Napoleon's time. Onions date back to the days of Pharaoh.

If Dr. Anthony wants something to make him smell bad really and truly, I recommend to him garlic, asafetida, or wet sulphur. If he will put a tiny bit of garlic no larger than a pinhead under the right lapel of his coat, then enter a warm room filled with 50 people, he will leave that room instantly, just as though they had just remembered to attend funerals of their mothers-in-law.

Young People's Conference.
Methodist young people of the Atlanta West district will register from 3:30 to 5 o'clock this afternoon at the First Methodist church for a five-day training conference that is scheduled to begin Monday evening. Methodist young people that if men need to be trained for war service, they ought also to be trained for right living.

Courses of study for the proposed training conference pertain to such subjects as "The New Testament in the Life of Today," "Worship and Evangelism," "Senior and Young People's Plans," "Friendship and Marriage." Instructors and speakers for the conference will be Dr. H. H. Harris, Dr. Henry Johnson, the Rev. Luther McArthur, the Rev. Frank Quillian, and the Rev. J. W. Segars. The Rev. R. E. Elliott is conference counsellor, and Miss Edna Barton is district director.

Radio Program To Pay Tribute To Southland

'Pause That Refreshes' Hour Will Offer Dixie Melodies.

A half-hour highlighting the southland at its sunniest is the Andre Kostelanetz-Albert Spalding offering during the "Pause That Refreshes on the Air" broadcast to be heard over WGST at 4:30 o'clock this afternoon.

Soft-voiced as the wail of Negroes hustling cotton for its long journey down the levee, the famed Golden Gate Quartet will probe deep into their racial memories for such moving spirituals as "You Better Run," "The Old Ark's a Moverin'" and "Seekin' for a City."

Andre Kostelanetz' orchestra assist this evocation of the old south with an interesting arrangement of a group of spirituals.

The Golden Gate Quartet, unknown in Charlotte, N. C., not so long ago, today rank as one of the world's outstanding choral groups. Whether simple or stylized, their interpretations of spirituals are matchless—as such disparate audiences as Carnegie Hall and Swing Mecca, Uptown Cafe Society, can testify. Their names: Willie Johnson, Orlando Wilson, William Landford, and Henry Owens.

PAUSE THAT REFRESHES.
"Paradise," Brown, orchestra.
"You Better Run" (Revival Spiritual).
Traditional, quartet.
"All Through the Night," Schwartz, orchestra.
"Waltz," Godowsky, Mr. Spalding.
"Swing Low Sweet Chariot," orchestra.
"The Old Ark's a Moverin'," Golden Gate Quartet.
"Deep River," orchestra.
"Ezekiel Saw the Wheel," orchestra.
"Seekin' for a City," Golden Gate Quartet.

There's only one Christianity that I know anything about. Any other kind is a fake. I'm interested in the Christianity of Jesus Christ. That's the kind St. Paul said he counted all things but dross that he might gain.

I'm a thoroughbred Methodist, but I'm no fool about it. I'm a Methodist 'cause that group suits me pretty well. But heaven knows I don't consider Methodism perfect, or has a monopoly on Christianity. I'm a long sight more concerned about being a Christian than I am about being a Methodist. I can be an acceptable Methodist, and then go to hell. "Methodist Christianity." My Christianity, your Christianity, the other fellow's Christianity. Heavenly days!

Hitler and the Japs and the devil all follow the same policy—divide 'em and conquer. Fontaine says "Religious contention is the devil's harvest." And right here in America we have 247 samples of "Christianity" among our 247 sects and insects of denominations.

Finally, brethren and fellow sinners, I give you this as a silly item par excellence. To think that anybody should be such a Dumb Dora as to write of Methodist Christianity, or any Christianity save that of Jesus Christ.

May the good Lord deliver us.

VENISON ZOO—GEORGIA STYLE

Political propaganda (disguised as news item): "With a gift of 11 deer from the U. S. Fish and Wildlife Service, the state game farm has started a small 'fawn nursery' to aid the propagation of deer in Georgia. As soon as they multiply, Zach D. Crazy said, some will be released and placed in counties that have year-round closed seasons and few, if any, deer."

The true development of the deer zoo on Briarcliff road, the exact location of which will soon provoke a discussion of property deals, calls for a little background information, including a look at Florida and Blackbeard Island, off the Georgia coast. First, however, it might be said that such a zoo is frowned on by experienced game technicians, who have found that attempts to raise deer in domesticated are sad and expensive experiments. As a result, they have been virtually abandoned.

The deer in the zoo came from Blackbeard as Georgia's share in a deal whereby Florida received over 50. They were trapped by Tom Hardy, who was paid by Florida and who had been fired by Cravey last year. Hardy had been trapping deer on the government refuge for distribution in Georgia, for restocking depleted areas which could offer adequate feed grounds and cover.

He was released under protest of the Wildlife Division, which couldn't afford to pay him. Now suppose he had been kept in the employ of this state. He trapped over 70 deer in approximately six months.

The cost would have been no more than $1,000, or the same amount that it cost Florida. Even $2,000 would make little difference in such an undertaking. The deer could have been sold to Florida for nearly $4,000, thus creating a fund that could have gone toward further work in deer management, or for use even in fish propagation.

Thus, by abandoning the original trapping plan, Georgia deprived itself of at least $2,000 in cash and over 50 deer. All it has to show is the small herd of 11, which now is incarcerated in a public zoo. This is the gift to which "Taint So" refers.

'Project 10-D'

What is Florida doing with these Georgia deer? The chin-whisker state certainly is not keeping them in a public stall and attempting to restock the state as fast as they "multiply."

Florida is using them in "Project 10-D," a deer restocking program made possible by Pittman-Robertson funds, which Cravey says he can get along very well without. Pittman-Robertson projects wouldn't allow the zoo plan.

There it is—the lowdown on the "gift" deer from the Wildlife Service. Actually, the sportsmen of the state would benefit more from the experiment if "Taint So" would butcher the whole herd today and stage a "crow" supper for administration henchmen. This would eliminate a feed bill and the fate that hand-raised deer generally run up against, in being sold or man that leads to their sudden destruction.

Fish and Wildlife Service officials in this region agree that the zoo plan is taboo and destined to meet with failure.

Florida Likes It

While Florida and Pittman-Robertson funds are on the deck, let's take the shears to "Florida Game and Fish," a monthly publication from Tallahassee.

"The year 1941 was a progressive one. . . . Probably the biggest news in years, as far as conservation goes, was the announcement that the 1941 legislature had passed (Georgia) did, too, but it was vetoed the necessary assent legislation for Florida to participate in the Pittman-Robertson act."

The present Governor in his first message to the legislature advocated prompt passage of this legislation. . . . There is available to Florida through June, 1943, $85,000 in federal funds.

"Another important act of the legislature was passage of a proposed constitutional amendment to be submitted to the voters in November, 1942. . . . This amendment would add greatly to the permanency of the Game and Fresh Water Fish Commission."

This is similar to, but not as sweeping as, the type of amendment being sought by the Georgia Wildlife Federation for Georgia.

Among the 10 projects supported by Pittman-Robertson funds in Florida is the deer re-

DOG NOTES

BRANDING DOGS.

All this talk about the government supplying each of us with a national identification card reminds me of the method once employed by dog owners as an aid in identifying their pets.

Years ago in England and other foreign countries, dog owners made a practice of branding their initials on their dogs as a means of identification and as a protection against theft. This was done chiefly by owners of large packs of hounds or other hunting dogs, but often the owner of a single dog had his pet branded. Usually only one initial was used. This was about six or seven inches in height and could be distinguished at a great distance.

BUY LICENSE—IT PAYS.

Like a number of dog owners, George Harrington of Los Angeles, thought he had "an inalienable right" to keep his dog in his home or confined to his own yard without paying a $4 city dog license. City authorities thought otherwise. Harrington was arrested and his case was carried to the

Cyclist Is Thrown By Dead Beaver

COLUMBUS, Ga., March 7.—(AP)—Winson Lee says he was riding home from work in the middle of the night when something that looked like "a big black ball" started slapping his leg and threw him from his bicycle.

Lee grabbed a stick and there was a dead 32-pound beaver on the road 12 miles from Columbus.

Terrier Wool Seen as Help To War Effort

NEW YORK, March 7.—The possibility that the pure-bred dogs of America may aid the nation's war effort in a manner that never before has been associated with "man's best friend" is contained in a short item in the March issue of the American Kennel Gazette. The item is an appeal, voiced in the column devoted to news of Bedlington Terriers, that breeders save the wool combed from their dogs so that it may be carded and eventually made into sweaters and mufflers for our fighting men.

It is nothing new to use dog wool in knitting. In fact, men's suits and women's dresses have been woven from the wool combed out of the coats of certain breeds. But in the past it was merely of an experimental nature and little practical use was made of it. Few kennel owners ever bothered to save dog wool.

Certain breeds of dogs—and there are 108 breeds that the AKC recognizes as pure-bred—have much fuller coats than others and consequently have a greater proportion of wool to offer. Also, there are many different textures. That of the Bedlington Terrier is described as very much like Angora.

If the dog owners of America were organized in the collecting of wool, it is quite probable that the millions of dogs throughout the United States could produce enough wool to make this a very valuable contribution to the national welfare.

"Through co-operation between the Florida Commission of Game and Fresh Water Fish and the State Livestock Sanitary Board restocking of deer is being effected in counties where this animal has been exterminated in the livestock board's cattle fever tick eradication program. Deer are being transplanted from overstocked areas on wildlife refuges in Georgia, South Carolina and from private plantations."

Shadows and Substance

THE MAN YOU LOVE TO HATE.

Come Tuesday night, Atlanta theatergoers will have their first opportunity to meet in person the famous movie villain, Erich Von Stroheim, who will appear at the Erlanger theater in the role of the monster man Boris Karloff created on Broadway, the insane nephew of two murder-mad old maids in the comedy, "Arsenic and Old Lace."

Von Stroheim—director, actor, writer, army officer, newspaperman, magazine writer—is known to most movie fans as "the man you love to hate," and he has a part in which he can live up to reputation. In case you wonder about the name, he is a naturalized American, born in Austria, and the only time he was in Germany was when riding through the country on a train en route to America.

A graduate of Austrian Military Academy, he often played Prussian officers in motion pictures and was called upon to act as technical advisor for many others. Once, following the peace of World War I, Von Stroheim was inactive for nine months due to a dearth of war pictures. In 1926, he was selected one of the 10 best directors in the business. His role in "Arsenic and Old Lace" is his first on the stage since he appeared on Orpheum circuit in dramatization of a novel by himself.

Short Takes of Arsenic.

"Arsenic and Old Lace," which has already been made into a movie by Warner Brothers, starring Cary Grant, Priscilla Lane and many from the original cast, will not be released until 1943, as an agreement with the stage rights owners prohibits the film release until the stage units have quit touring, and Messrs. Lindsay and Crouse intend to tour this company again next season. . . . The big problem confronting traveling shows today is railroad equipment. . . . "A. & O. L." uses one 70-foot baggage car, one coach and two sleepers—or it did when he began touring. . . . However, the Army has taken coaches now and sleepers are so hard to get, the company is making as many moves by day as possible. . . . It took "Hellzapoppin'" the last stage attraction to play the Erlanger, 10 hours to make 200 miles on one of its jumps. . . . And there was doubt right up to the last minute that enough train equipment could be found, not used by the Army, to take it from here to Albany, Ga., in time for a scheduled performance. . . .

Handsome Jack Whiting, who is supposed to hail from Albany himself, is the stepfather of Douglas Fairbanks Jr. . . . He married Doug's mother after her divorce from the elder Fairbanks. . . . Doug Jr. spent his last day before his induction into the Navy with his mother and stepfather in Boston recently. . . . Press agents for the show had it all set to get a little extra publicity with the movie star visiting his mother backstage. . . . But the President's son, who is in the Navy, came down and the Navy got all the publicity. . . . Laura Hope Crews, who plays one of the sweet old ladies who enjoy murdering old men, was last in Atlanta for the world premiere of "Gone With the Wind," in which she played Aunt Pittypat. . . . Forrest Orr, who portrays "Teddy" Roosevelt in the play, will be remembered by Atlantans as the "pinching" uncle with the stage version of "The Philadelphia Story," which starred Katie Hepburn here last season.

"Arsenic and Old Lace" was written as a serious murder mystery. Then rewritten into one of the best comedies yet offered on Broadway. You've a treat in store for you at the Erlanger Tuesday and Wednesday night when you'll learn there is a humorous side to killing.

The Academy Awards.

Luck fell our way last fall when Harry Ballance, the genial gent from the Twentieth Century-Fox organization, asked us to view an advance showing of "How Green Was My Valley." We promptly included it in our 10 best picture list of the year. It was a masterful production with excellent acting.

Harry's invitation kept the Academy Award from scooping us, for the Academy in their voting selected this John Ford production as the outstanding film of 1941 when it was just playing a regular run here. While we picked "Citizen Kane" as the top for the year (because of new techniques introduced), we can easily see how the Oscar winner could win hands down in the balloting. It had a great cast, a poignant story, sympathetic direction and good photography. Because of its greatness, it won four prizes in all: best direction for John Ford; best supporting actor, Donald Crisp; best black and white photography, and, of course, best film.

Twentieth Century-Fox took another Oscar, to total five, when their "Blood and Sand," a Tyrone Power-Rita Hayworth starrer, took the best color photograph job.

Fox, who's past master at formula musicals, stepped out in the more serious field and brought home the harvest from the green valley.

They worried about showing "How Green Was My Valley" in Atlanta. But they finally did. And with a great break. It was playing here at the time it was named the Academy winner. And it is still playing here. After a week at the Fox and another at the Paramount, it was decided to hold it over for a second week at the Paramount, where it still is. It must have been doing okay, for it got the hold-over nod over "The Man Who Came to Dinner," a serious play in a third week over one of the best comedies of the year. Did someone say something about a comedy being the only type show Atlantans will go to see.

A Word to the Wise.

Ginger Rogers won the Academy Award for the best acting in "Kitty Foyle" in 1940, and then sat back to rest on her laurels in 1941, coming forth in only one film—the slightly nightmarish "Tom, Dick and Harry," which was far from Oscar material. (However, she is currently out in a new Fox release, "Roxie Hart," which must have been made in 1941.)

Ginger should be held up as an example to this year's winner for the best feminine acting—Joan Fontaine. Ginger reached the ultimate goal and seemingly quit. Joan, since she was kicked out by RKO four years ago because "she would never make an actress," has been doing all right in these one-a-year jobs since. She almost won the award from Ginger in 1940 with her great performance in "Rebecca." "Suspicion," in which she played a similar role—that of a young wife who lived in fear of her husband, was her only film last year. Her acting, again under Alfred Hitchcock as director, was good enough to nose out our choice for the 1941 Oscar—Greer Garson—and has established her much ahead of her sister, Olivia de Havilland, who prior to "Rebecca" was believed to be the only actress in the family. Joan's only other outstanding acting was in "The Women."

It will be interesting to watch what effect winning an Oscar will have on Gary Cooper, whose "Sergeant York" interpretation captured "single-handedly" the male acting award.

Gary's pictures have been almost limitless. And all, that is, nearly all, good performances in a variety of roles which he managed to ease through with a slow, lovable awkwardness. But he'd never before won an Oscar. For the sake of those who enjoy cinema entertainment, it is to be hoped Gary keeps prolific.

THE CLOWNS—Neal, Ollie, and Dick, the Heerdink Brothers, clowns, limber up for their part in the Pan-American circus beginning March 11 at the Municipal auditorium. The horizontal bar act and tumbling act of these clowns is only a part of the performance sponsored by the Atlanta Woman's Club. Proceeds will go to defense and charitable activities.

John Payne and Claudette Colbert do the romancing in "Remember the Night," beginning Friday at the Fox.

Walter Pidgeon plays the parson in "How Green Was My Valley," at the Paramount.

MURDER MONGER—The screen's Erich von Stroheim plays the stage villain in "Arsenic and Old Lace," coming to the Erlanger Tuesday. Shown with him are Angie Adams and Henry Sharp.

Just as belligerent as when they defied each other in "What Price Glory" and "The Cockeyed World," Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe are together in uniform again in "Call Out the Marines," RKO-Radio's new service comedy which carries on the adventures of the famous pair.

Horses that vanish into thin air, pretty girls that appear from nowhere, the Phantom Soldier, and scores of other mystic things can be seen at the Roxy theater beginning Thursday, when Blackstone, world-famous magician, and his company of 30 for a week's run.

Blackstone, in his 30th year of touring the United States, is the lone survivor of the old school of magicians including Houdini, Thurston and the Great Alexander.

In addition to a company of 30 people, Blackstone carries two baggage cars heavily loaded with apparatus, cabinets and other magical paraphernalia.

Among his latest creations, which will be presented on the Roxy stage are "Sylvia," "The Lady With the Lamp," "The Girls From Mars" and "The Phantom Soldier."

The Blackstone show will be in addition to "Melody Lane," a Universal picture starring the Merry Macs, Sandy, Leon Errol, Anne Gwynne and Robert Paige.

INSPIRATION GIRL—Rita Hayworth, above, has new title, that of Inspiration Girl—and it's not just a press agent's dream, though she personally is. Rita came up to stardom the hard way through the chorus, and the Hollywood Chorus Group voted the title to one who made good.

Laughter and excitement are the highlights of "Call Out the Marines," RKO Radio's new action comedy which brings those famous devil-dogs, Victor McLaglen and Edmund Lowe, back to the screen in a timely resumption of their old rivalry. Binnie Barnes and Paul Kelly head the supporting cast.

Atlantans tomorrow night will get an opportunity to hear at first hand Rosetta Tharpe, the former choir singer, who will be here with Lucky Millinder, the jumping little Harlem maestro, who with his Savoy Ballroom orchestra, will be at the municipal auditorium.

Millinder has often been referred to as a combination Tiny Bradshaw and Cab Calloway, is expected to draw a big crowd. A section for white patrons has been reserved.

Bert Lahr and Buddy Ebsen comprise the screen's newest comedy team. The two funsters head the cast of RKO Radio's new comedy-farce with music, "Sing Your Worries Away," with June Haver, Patsy Kelly, Sam Levene and other noted personalities in featured roles.

THAT DOUGLAS MAN—Melvyn Douglas is making the rounds again and his starring partner is none other than Norma Shearer, herself, top feminine actress on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer roster. They are the impoverished professional house guests of Noel Coward's "We Were Dancing," opening Thursday at Loew's Grand theater for a week's run.

Norma Shearer 'Belongs' To Hollywood

Anyone in motion pictures will subscribe to the statement that Norma Shearer, in a very peculiar and special way, "belongs to Hollywood."

It isn't solely because of her own professional career was started and carried on there, nor because of her marriage to one of the most brilliant of film executives, the late Irving Thalberg. These factors have entered into the full picture, of course, especially the inspirational way in which Miss Shearer carried on after her bereavement, and her characteristic trait of seeking to give a co-star or fellow player scenes in a film, even at her own expense. Many times she has asked a producer or director to build up a certain featured part, or has suggested that she—the star—has been given undue prominence in the development of certain sequences.

Georgians Collect Many Tons of Metal on 'MacArthur Day'

DECATUR'S SCRAP—DeKalb turned out full force yesterday to bring its collection of scrap metal for the aid of MacArthur to a sizeable head. Mid-afternoon found the courthouse square banked with eight tons of the junk metal as trucks continued their county-wide canvass to bring in the valuable "waste materials." Pictured above are workers of the drive headed by the Civilian Defense committee and the American Legion post. They are, left to right, C. W. Mitchell, Louis Barker and Elmer J. Heible.

DeKalb Collects Eight Tons

ATHENS, Ga., Feb. 7.—(AP)—Georgians today gave practical expression to their patriotism by combining a celebration of "MacArthur Day" with the collection of scrap iron for use in the nation's armament factories.

Dedicated to the General Douglas MacArthur, leader of the tiny force of fighting men still holding fast in the Philippines, the day was set aside in virtually every Georgia county.

Receiving points were designated in districts in towns throughout the state, and at many of which, buyers were present to pay for metal.

Boy and Girl Scouts, 4-H club members and other organizations joined hands to collect the scrap iron which will be used in defense products.

Big Collection.

Although too early to estimate the amount of scrap iron turned in to specified collection centers, T. R. Bredehoeve, chairman of the State USDA war board, said it would run into hundreds of tons. "Our farm folks are wide awake now and are fighting mad," he said in a preliminary statement. "You'll see more scrap iron and steel pour in than you ever dreamed there was on Georgia farms."

Special "MacArthur Day" programs were carried out in many counties, with Moultrie near the top of those cities making elaborate preparations. Residents of surrounding counties were invited to not only bring in their iron, but to remain for the band concert and speechmaking which took place on courthouse square.

J. P. Culpepper, president of the Georgia Bankers' Association, was chosen to deliver the principal address there.

Collection of old iron of every type has been underway in some sections for the past few weeks under direction of 4-H club boys and girls, and already has reached high figures.

State 4-H Club Leader W. A. Sutton Jr., said reports this week from 64 of the 159 counties showed a total collection of 3,039,000 pounds.

Collection by the 4-H Clubs will continue "until every available piece of metal has been gathered, so that our fight against the foe will be more effective and complete," he said.

From Telfair county, County Agent R. A. Turner, and Home

Agent Mrs. Julia Kitchens, reported around 70,000 pounds of scrap iron sold. They told of Jessie Mae Holt, of the Uniondale 4-H Club, and her eight-year-old brother who, using a wheel barrow, collected 1,000 pounds of scrap in one day. When sold they purchased $5 worth of defense stamps and each started a fund with which to purchase a defense bond.

Buses Used.

L. V. Cawley, Brooks county agent, said approximately 50,000 pounds of scrap metal had been collected already in his county and the campaign is still on.

Irwin county officials authorized the use of school buses to haul in the scrap.

The collected iron and steel is sold to local junk dealers at prevailing prices, and is then turned into channels leading to the war industries. Much of the discarded scrap will find its way into tanks, shells and guns with which to beat the Axis, sponsors of the drive said.

"Scrap to slap the Jap off the map" was the slogan used in many counties.

All of DeKalb county is working as a unit in its collection of scrap metal, Civilian Defense headquarters reported a mass of eight tons of material gathered during the present drive.

Working with the Decatur Civilian Defense group is the American Legion, Harold Byrd Post No. 66, under the direction of Roy Freeman, chairman of the salvage committee, and E. J. Heible, his associate.

The town square in Decatur is the center dump pile for materials gathered by truck which yesterday canvassed the county. The square serves as a headquarters and telephone calls to this center send trucks to various sectors of residential and business districts to gather the scrap.

All DeKalb civic organizations are working together in the collection of salvage. The Rotary Club bears the paper gathering responsibility while each group in the county has special committees designated for collection of various kinds of scrap.

Joint Service Many Women Set by Mercer Register for And Wesleyan Defense Work

Bishop Arthur Moore To Preach Sermon at May Exercises.

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION. MACON, Ga., March 7.—Bishop Arthur J. Moore, president of Wesleyan College and bishop of the southeastern jurisdiction of the Methodist church, will deliver a commencement sermon to the joint graduating classes of Mercer University and Wesleyan in May, President Spright Dowell, of Mercer, announced Saturday.

The service will be held in the Macon municipal auditorium at 3 p. m. Sunday, May 31.

Mercer's commencement, originally scheduled for June 7, has been moved forward a week as a gesture of co-operation with Wesleyan and in conformity with the general speed-up in education, Dr. Dowell said.

Mrs. Myrick Says Results Are 'Amazing' in Some Counties.

SAVANNAH, Ga., March 7.—(AP)—Registration of women for defense work in some counties was described today as "amazing" by Mrs. Shelby Myrick, chairman of the women's division of the Citizens' Defense Committee.

Mrs. W. B. Smith Sr., of Barnesville, Lamar county, reports that a total of 1,141 women have registered there, she said, and some of them were so eager for first aid training that they motored to Griffin, 16 miles away, every night for a week during the recent bad weather.

Mrs. Ross P. Cox, of Rome, said 2,333 women have registered in Floyd county, and 1,310 have completed first aid training, 210 have completed home nursing, 24 have had Motor Corps instruction and are in uniform and giving service, and 854 are sewing, knitting and cutting for production.

Similar reports of progress come from all sections of the state, Mrs. Myrick said, but stressed the need of still greater effort.

Coast in Panic Over Jap Situation, Congressman Says

A closely-knit, controlled army of Japanese enemy aliens has thrown the whole west coast into a near panic, Congressman John Sparkman, of Alabama, ranking member of the naval affairs committee, said yesterday afternoon as he arrived in Atlanta after accompanying a special congressional committee to California to investigate alien activities.

Congressman Sparkman, who last night addressed the annual Founders' Day banquet of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity in Atlanta, said panicky officials on the west coast testified before his committee there had been relatively no sabotage on the part of the Japanese aliens because they were so well organized and controlled they were waiting for an actual attack before springing into activity.

Plans to Move Aliens. Sparkman said the committee recommended these enemies, of which there are approximately 200,000 be rounded up and the most dangerous ones sent to concentration camps. Arrangements are being made to move systematically the others into states farther east and away from the vulnerable coast.

Many of the Japanese aliens, he pointed out, owned property near vital defense areas. The committee, Sparkman said, is recommending a branch of the alien property custodian be established on the coast to supervise this property when the Japanese are moved out by Army officials in charge of this area.

Congressman Sparkman spoke pessimistically about the progress of the war, pointing out the situation was "more dangerous" than most people realize. He said he expected the Allies to make a bold, determined stand in Australia and that he was hopeful they would hold out there. He explained the fall of Singapore and the Dutch Indies were no more than he had expected all along, and that he was amazed over the stand General MacArthur had been able to put up in the Philippines.

Hitler Stand Bolstered. "The whole country has got to get itself into the proper attitude for the prosecution of this war," he said. "We read these screaming stories about a few of our planes nabbing off a few of the enemy's, which is no more than a little dogfight and means little toward ultimate victory."

He emphasized also that some people's idea of victory is the passage of large appropriation bills, whereas this money must be transformed into finished products and put in the fighting lines.

He said it was certainly foolhardy for Americans to expect Hitler to crack up anything soon. The Japanese successes, he said, only have bolstered Hitler's position.

Congressman Sparkman was honor guest at the Pi K. A. banquet and dance last night along with Roy D. Hickman, national president, Judge John S. McClelland, exalted ruler of the Elks, who presided, and R. E. Shields, composer of the fraternity song, "Dream Girl of Pi K. A."

One of the highlights of the celebration was the presentation of the "Dream Girl, Miss Peggy Bussy, by the Emory chapter.

Wrecked Airplane Taken From River

STUART, Fla., March 7.—(AP)—An Army plane that lost a wing in a tropical squall and carried seven fliers to death in the St. Lucie river was salvaged today and removed to the Army Air Field, West Palm Beach, for inspection.

A contingent of soldiers, aided by the Coast Guard, continued a search for bodies, none of which has been recovered. "We will continue the search until the bodies are found or we are satisfied they will not be found," a spokesman said. "The tide runs very strong in the area where the plane crashed. This makes the search very difficult."

Mrs. Ross P. Cox, of Rome, said 2,333 women have registered in Floyd county, and 1,310 have completed first aid training, 210 have completed home nursing, 24 have had Motor Corps instruction and are in uniform and giving service, and 854 are sewing, knitting and cutting for production.

Dental Board Requested To Change Rules

Examination Change for Dentists Asked by Dr. Murphy.

SPECIAL TO THE CONSTITUTION. MACON, Ga., March 7.—Members of the Board of Dental Examiners for Georgia have been called on to consider "necessary changes" in state dental examinations in an open letter by Dr. R. H. Murphy, Macon, secretary of the Georgia Dental Association.

The letter appears in the latest issue of the Journal of the Georgia Dental Association, distributed this week. Georgia's present system of examining applicants for license to practice dentistry is "antiquated and unfair," Dr. Murphy wrote. "I have never felt that it is quite fair for a man to go to dental school for four years and then in three or four days have a group of five men submit a series of questions, and determine from this batch of questions and answers whether or not a man is qualified to practice dentistry," said Dr. Murphy.

Dr. Murphy suggests that the Georgia board require deans of dental schools to submit a list of graduates for the current year, with averages in every subject taught for a period of four years. The board would require that a student present an average of from 75 to 85 per cent for the four-year period, and also require the applicant to appear before the board in person.

"I believe this plan can be put into operation without going before the legislature with an amendment to the dental law," Dr. Murphy declared.

The letter was addressed to the following dental board members: Dr. E. N. Brown, of Statesboro; Dr. G. C. Hunter, of LaGrange; Dr. J. H. Brewton, of Waycross; Dr. L. H. Darby, of Vidalia; Dr. C. J. May, of Washington, Ga.

Police To Check On Fast Drivers

Atlanta police are going to begin "cracking down" on speeders, G. Neal Ellis, assistant chief in charge of traffic, said yesterday after a conference with Mayor LeCraw.

Chief Ellis pointed out that faulty tires increase the danger of speeding and emphasized that henceforth police will be on the lookout for drivers exceeding the speed limit.

During January and February there were only seven traffic deaths as compared with 10 for the corresponding period last year inside the city limits.

List All Machines, Factories Urged

An appeal to all Georgia manufacturers, no matter how small, to list their equipment with headquarters, 150 Hurt building, and also to apply for war orders, was issued yesterday by J. Verlyn Booth, manager of the contract distribution branch of the War Production Board.

"We must gear the production lines to the fighting lines," he said. "Every available machine must be enlisted. We want even the amateur worker with his home shop to let us know what he has and what he can produce."

THEY MODEL BEST—So far as modeling for photographs are concerned these three beauties are among 11 picked by Leonid Skvirsky, Constitution fashion page photographer, as the best in the business in Atlanta. Left to right are Annette Livingston, Annette Baker and Carolyn Williams.

Atlanta's Eleven Best Models Picked by Leonid Skvirsky

By CELESTE SIBLEY.

Leonid Skvirsky has bolted his door and instructed his maid to answer all calls with a single, succinct greeting:

"Wrong number!"

The reason for the famous Russian-born photographer's dither is simple. He finally has succumbed to pressure and picked out of a population of beautiful women the 11 he considers out front in looks, style and photogenic appeal.

They are 11 out of 113 selected by The Constitution to model clothes on the Sunday fashion page during the last two years—and Skvirsky thinks he deserves whatever feminine fury he brings down on his head for being so rash.

Favorites Listed.

Here are Skvirsky's favorites for fashion pictures: Annette Livingston, 18, blonde blue-eyed student at High Museum of Art; Annette Baker, 19, brunet; Carolyn Williams, 18, brunet; Jean Magill (Mrs. John), dark-haired, blue-eyed; Jean Millard, 21, dark-haired; Sally Doherty (Mrs. William), red-headed, blue-eyed ex-Powers model; Elaine Bond, 21, blonde Delta Airline stewardess; Mrs. Malcolm Foster, brunet young mother; Gloria Gormley, brunet student at Georgia; Louella Stone, blonde quartermaster worker; Doris Singleton, brunet, member of Rich's fashion department.

"I won't do it! I won't do it!" cried the portrait photographer in un-Russian terror when first faced with the request to pick the best models. "They are all beautiful! I will say no more!"

But under the most persuasive kind of pressure he gave way and picked not 10 but 11 outstanding fashion models—to be placed in any order you please.

Three Are Blondes.

Three of them are blondes, one is a red-head, ex-Powers model, and the others are vivacious brunets. They are, generally speaking, tallish and slender and their taste in coiffures runs to smooth long bobs. One is an art student, one is a coed at the University of Georgia, three work for the telephone company, one works for the Army, one in a department store fashion department, one is an airline stewardess and three are happily married, one the mother of a baby.

The youngest is 18 and the oldest is about 25. With the exception of the ex-Powers model, who is married, and the Army worker who gave up a career in New York to stay home and work for the Quartermaster Corps, the girls are in accord on the idea that modeling as a career would be "simply swell."

Guard Fires On Prowlers At Reservoir

Chemical Test of Water Ordered at Army Base.

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., March 7.—(AP)—Burton reservoir, supplying water to the Army air base, was shut off and a chemical analysis of the water made today after a reservoir guard fired two shots at two men who disregarded orders to halt.

The civilian guard reported he fired at the men who drove up to the reservoir about 4:30 o'clock in the morning after one of them passed the gate to the reservoir grounds and broke into a run upon orders to halt.

The prowler escaped in a car driven by a second man. Whether the guard's bullets struck anyone was not determined.

The guard, Nick E. Sanchez, recently was assigned to the reservoir by the city parks department. Police Chief Pat O'Grady said he was unable to determine if sabotage was involved from the guard's statement. Sanchez said that one man fell but regained his feet after the first shot. The guard's second shot hit the darkened car as it raced off.

The air base, meanwhile, was supplied with water pumped in from another supply after City Manager Charles E. Wells ordered the reservoir cut off for analysis made of its water.

The guard, Nick E. Sanchez, recently was assigned to the reservoir by the city parks department. Police Chief Pat O'Grady said he was unable to determine if sabotage was involved from the guard's statement. Sanchez said that one man fell but regained his feet after the first shot. Meriwether Placed

In Newnan Circuit

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) President Roosevelt signed today a bill transferring Meriwether county, Georgia, from the Columbus division of the middle district to the Newnan division of the northern judicial district of the state.

The bill also provided terms of the district court in the Macon division to be held at Macon on the third Mondays in April and October and in the Americus division at Americus on the third Mondays in January and the second Mondays in June.

"Herd up" that used stove, heater, fur coat, radio, gun, etc., and "corral" cash by advertising them in the Want Ads of The Constitution.

Brazilians Retaliate For Jap Harshness

RIO DE JANEIRO, March 7.—(AP)—The Brazilian government announced tonight that its embassy in Japan has been occupied by military police, its ambassador held incommunicado and its "functionaries treated like prisoners of war," and that accordingly it was taking "similar measures" in retaliation against Japanese diplomats in Brazil.

An official government statement said:

"The government of Brazil has been informed officially that the ambassador and diplomatic functionaries of Brazil in Japan are in a disturbing and strange situation incompatible with international uses and customs. "Our ambassador was placed incommunicado, our embassy was occupied by civil forces and military police which remain in it, and our functionaries are treated like prisoners of war."

Axis powers. But like all the South American republics with the exception of Argentina and Chile, she has broken off diplomatic relations with Japan, Germany and Italy.)

"The Brazilian government, which has given all guarantees to the diplomats and functionaries of countries with which it has ceased diplomatic relations and has assured them all liberties, in accordance with its traditions of hospitality, finds itself forced against its will to give the ambassador and functionaries of Japan in Brazil treatment equivalent to that which Brazilian diplomats are receiving in Japan."

Early tonight four uniformed policemen and two plainclothesmen guarded the gate to the palatial residence of Japanese Ambassador Ito Hiroshi.

One of the police disclosed that no Japanese diplomats or functionaries would be permitted to leave their homes without special authorization and then they will be accompanied by guards.

Effects of War On Surgery To Be Studied

Southeastern Congress To Open Sessions Here Tomorrow.

Effects of war on surgery will be the principal topic of discussion during the three-day session of the Southeastern Surgical Congress, which opens tomorrow at the Biltmore hotel.

Many prominent surgeons, several of whom are now in military service, will participate in the congress, which will bring more than 1,000 southern surgeons here for the meeting.

In addition to addresses by leaders in the medical profession, Paul V. McNutt, of Washington, D. C., director of the Social Security Board, will address the congress on the preparedness program.

In view of the fact that so much of the program will be given over to a discussion of war's effects upon surgery, that the surgeons are calling the meeting their war program, and while surgical problems not related to the effects of war will find a place on the program, they will be relegated to the background.

Dr. Fred Rankin, of Lexington, Ky., president-elect of the Southeastern Congress, will address the surgeons on "The Medical Profession and War Duties," while Colonel Leonard C. Rowntree, of Washington, will speak on "How Can the Medical Profession Augment National Efficiency During War Time?" Colonel Sanford W. French will speak on "Medical and Surgical Service in the Training Camps," while Dr. George Baehr, of Washington, D. C., will speak on "Field and Hospital Services for Civilian Casualties."

Others scheduled for addresses are Dr. Robert H. Ivy, of Philadelphia; Dr. Joseph D. Collins, Norfolk, Va.; Dr. J. S. McLester, of Birmingham, Ala.; Dr. Russell M. Wilder, of Rochester, Minn.; and Dr. Hilliard E. Miller, of New Orleans.

Dr. B. T. Beasley, prominent local surgeon and secretary and treasurer of the Southeastern Surgical Congress, is in charge of the program, while those attending the convention will be the guests of the Fulton County Medical Association and of the Georgia Medical Association.

SPEAKER—Paul V. McNutt, director of the Social Security Board and national figure in politics, is scheduled to address the Surgical Congress, which meets here for three days.

IN CHARGE—Dr. B. T. Beasley, Atlanta surgeon, is in charge of the program during the sessions of the Southeastern Surgical Congress, opening tomorrow.

South Wants Total Mobilization

By GEORGE GALLUP.
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 7.—The tendency of the American public to be ahead of congress on most legislative matters, and to be ready to make extensive sacrifices, has been demonstrated at virtually every stage of the war since its outbreak in Europe two years ago.

The latest news from the public opinion front reveals a substantial public vote for one of the most drastic steps any nation at war can take—total mobilization of American men and women for the war effort.

Three complete geographical sections have thus far reported in the American Institute of Public Opinion's nation-wide survey on total mobilization and all have, by varying majorities, voted for it. Today, final reports are in for two more sections—the west central and the south—and they likewise show substantial public support for the total mobilization idea.

Favor Registration.
First, both sections vote in favor of a government registration of all able-bodied men and women who are not already in military service—a registration by which the government can determine what each person is qualified to do.

Second, opinion on the total mobilization idea itself is revealed in the following:
"After finding out what each person can do, should the government have the power to tell each citizen what to do as his part in the war effort and require him or her to do it?"

WEST CENTRAL STATES.
(Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota.)

Yes 62%
No 32%
Undecided 6

SOUTH.
(Virginia, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Texas, Oklahoma.)

Yes 66%
No 25%
Undecided 9

With poll results from three more sections—the Rocky Mountain, the east central and Pacific coast states—still to come in, the record to date shows Philadelphia, New York state, Massachusetts, New England, the middle Atlantic states the west central and the south all in favor of total mobilization. The highest favorable vote to date was in Philadelphia (67 per cent in favor), the lowest in the state of Massachusetts (53 per cent in favor).

Total mobilization, if it were put into effect, would mean sacrifices of an extreme character. It would give the government power to order any civilian to change his job if that would help the war effort, to move to another city if necessary, to devote his evenings or other spare time to war work, or to accept other changes in the routine of daily living.

Ahead of Congress.
The American public—judging by the poll results so far—is apparently already far ahead of congress in its thinking on the problem of how to put the country's maximum effort into winning the war.

The majority attitude is highly consistent with other facts known about American sentiment at present.

For example, the public believes the work-week in war industries should be 40 hours. Likewise, more than a year ago, it voted by a substantial majority to keep defense factories running day and night.

A poll completed only a few weeks ago found that more than two-thirds of all employed persons throughout the country would be willing to have 10 per cent deducted from each pay check to buy defense bonds.

These facts, plus the high percentage for total mobilization, indicate that if the war effort lags in the next few months, it will not be because the American people were unwilling to put their shoulders to the wheel.

2 American Reporters Arrested in Shanghai

WASHINGTON, March 7.—(AP) The State Department announced today that it had learned officially two American newspaper correspondents had been arrested by Japanese authorities in Shanghai on charges of espionage.

The two are Victor Koen of the New York Herald-Tribune and J. B. Powell, of the China Weekly Review. They were reported in good health, the State Department said.

SURGEON—Dr. Fred Rankin, of Lexington, Ky., is one of the principal speakers for the session of the Southeastern Surgical Congress, opening tomorrow at the Biltmore hotel.

MAYO MAN—Dr. Russell M. Wilder, of the famed Mayo clinic at Rochester, Minn., is among leading surgeons who will speak on the effects of war.

Miss Frances Coe Becomes the Bride Of John L. Gibson

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar John Coe, on Hardendorf avenue, was the scene yesterday afternoon of the marriage of Miss Marguerite Frances Coe and John Lindley Gibson. Rev. William M. Elliott Jr. read the marriage service at 3 o'clock.

Miss Vallie Enloe, pianist, presented a program of music. Cathedral candelabra, which held burning white tapers, and floor baskets filled with white gladioli and snapdragons were posed against a background of palms to form the decorations in the home.

Mrs. Ralph Morgan Good, who was her sister's matron of honor, and only attendant, was stylishly gowned in ocean wave blue crepe worn with a wool jacket in matching shade. Accenting her costume were London fan accessories and a shoulder cluster of tallman roses and white sweet peas.

The bride entered with her father, Oscar John Coe, who gave her in marriage. They were met by the groom and his father, Ben W. Gibson, who acted as best man. The lovely young bride was attired in a chic dressmaker suit of powder blue wool worn with a scarf of kolinsky furs. Accenting her ensemble were black patent leather accessories and a blue feathered hat trimmed with a veil. Her flowers were deep pink camellias and freesias.

Mr. and Mrs. Coe entertained at a reception at their home after the ceremony. Mrs. Coe received her guests wearing a navy crepe model worn with navy accessories and a shoulder spray of red roses and white gladioli. Mrs. Gibson, the groom's mother, was gowned in navy sheer accented by navy accessories and a shoulder cluster of tallman roses and coral gladioli.

The bride's table was overlaid with a lace cloth and centered with a tiered cake embedded in ferns. Crystal bowls filled with white snapdragons, flanked by silver candelabra, holding lighted white tapers, adorned the table.

During the afternoon Mr. Gibson and his bride departed for a wedding trip to Savannah and other points in the south. Upon their return they will reside at 361 Hardendorf avenue, northwest. Mr. Gibson is stationed at Lawson General hospital with the finance department.

She was formerly dean of women at the University of Shanghai under Dr. Herman Lui. She is now dean of women in the Baptist Bible Training School in Honolulu."

C. is entering the exhibit contest sponsored by the national W. C. T. U. I urge that each council prepare an exhibit and send a picture of same to me at once."

Art and Fashion Notables To Attend Colonial Jubilee

Running true to tradition the Young Matrons' Circle is marshaling its forces for its spring event on behalf of Tallulah Falls School. The extraordinary attraction is the Grand Colonial Jubilee which will assemble notables of the art and fashion world on Wednesday evening, April 8, for a style show with name costume created by Russell Patterson as the highlight. The showing will be held at Rich's magnolia room.

Mrs. G. Grady Poole, president of the circle, has named as general chairman, Mrs. Granger Hensell, with Mrs. Joseph C. Read, as co-chairman. Other committee chairmen include Mrs. Stillwell Robison for reservations and tickets, with Mrs. Emmett White as co-chairman; Mrs. Everett Thomas, who is handling the chest of flat silver that is the major prize of the jubilee, and Mrs. Joseph Boland, who will select the models appearing in the parade of modern styles.

Only 900 tickets will be available for the jubilee—exactly the number of people who can comfortably be accommodated. Among the notables coming to Atlanta for the event will be Russell Patterson, holder of the Paris International Exposition's highest award for original design in table flatware—the Medaille d'Argent; Augusta Owen Patterson of Town and Country; Frances T. Heard of House Beautiful; Katherine Blake of Vogue; Virginia Hamill of Woman's Home Companion; Fae Huttenlocher of Better Homes and Gardens, and Elinor Hillyer of House and Garden.

A special feature will be the table arrangements involving the participation of 24 garden clubs and displaying six flatware patterns. This feature was developed by Edith Harrison Henderson, expert on garden planning and arrangement, and chairman for the circle on garden club participation in the Grand Colonial Jubilee.

Unusual latitude will be permitted in the table arrangements with the accent on the silver, rather than the flowers. Judges will be the fashion editors whose visit is timed to coincide with the jubilee that signalizes Rich's 75th anniversary.

United Council of Church Women

State President—Mrs. Audley Morton, Athens.
State Publicity Chairman—Mrs. E. G. Mackay, Atlanta.

The Atlanta Council of Church Women, of which Mrs. C. M. Lancaster is president, is made up of the women of 38 churches, from nine different denominations.

PEACHTREE ROAD
N. W. COR. 12TH ST.
12 BRUNSWICK AVE.

There has been a steady growth in membership for the past few years and this year should show the largest increase of all since Christian people everywhere are at last awaking to the importance of co-operation, realizing that "a divided Christendom can not meet the need of this sorely divided world."

The council has for years past sponsored such annual observances as the World Day of Prayer and the May Day Luncheon for Church Women. A united study class has been held early in October for the past three years which has been attended by hundreds of women from all denominations. The first of these met in the parish house of All Saints' Episcopal church, the next in St. Mark Methodist church, and last fall it met in North Avenue Presbyterian church. Plans are now being made for this year's class.

Mrs. A. H. Sterne, second vice president of the council, is the chairman of the study committee and she will welcome suggestions from any interested source. Realizing the great need for organized work among underprivileged Negro boys, and learning of the unselfish work being done for them by S. J. Thompson in his Negro Boys' Club on Auburn avenue, the Atlanta Council has helped to create interest in this work and has helped from time to time to secure some much needed equipment. The present most urgent need is for more adequate accommodations. Aside from the boys' department of the Colored Y. M. C. A., which is taxed to its capacity, this club, occupying but two small and poorly lighted rooms, affords the only supervised leisure-time activities for Atlanta's many colored boys. This dearth of proper club facilities and the almost utter lack of playgrounds for colored children are the chief cause of delinquency among them and it is time for the white churchwomen of Atlanta to bestir themselves to meet so urgent a need.

The Atlanta Council has co-operated both this year and last in supplying workers for the residential section of the Red Cross roll calls and for the U. S. O. canvass, and, of course, the women of all the churches are loyally responding to every call of the country in this time of emergency.

The latest special interest of the Atlanta Council is in the American Mission to Lepers, Inc., the southern headquarters for which has recently been located in Atlanta, with offices in the Henry Grady building. This is an organization which enables medical missionaries and others all over the world to care for and, when possible, to cure lepers. A local auxiliary has been formed of representative women from each denomination, with Miss Daisy Davies as chairman. The field secretary is Miss Dora Jane Armstrong, who has spent some years in work among lepers in Africa.

Other officers of the Atlanta Council include Mrs. E. G. Mackay, first vice president; Mrs. L. E. Robb, third vice president; Mrs. E. D. Brewer, recording secretary; Mrs. Fred T. Bridges, corresponding secretary; Mrs. R. E. Bruce, treasurer; and Mrs. Francis L. Eyles, publicity chairman.

Tidwell, is cashier of the Atlanta Clearing House. Her paternal grandparents are the late James Hamilton Tidwell and Mrs. Lou Davenport Tidwell.

The bridegroom-elect is the only son of Robert Anderson and the late Mrs. Elizabeth Anderson, of Wilmington, N. C., formerly of Belfast, Northern Ireland, his father now being a retired businessman of Wilmington.

Dr. Anderson attended the University of North Carolina, where he was a member of the cross-country track team and received his D. D. S. degree at the Atlanta Southern Dental College. He was graduated with honors and is a member of the Psi Omega Dental fraternity. At present he is the staff dentist at the State hospital at Morganton, N. C., where he and his future bride will be attractive additions to the young married contingent after their wedding.

International Flower Show To Be Attended by Atlantans

By SALLY FORTH.

WHEN THE International Flower Show takes place in the Grand Central Palace in New York City on March 16, Atlanta will be represented by Mrs. Arthur Harris, Mrs. Jesse Draper, Mrs. Albert Thornton, Mrs. Davis Webster, and Mrs. Murdock Egan. The show will be staged by the Horticultural Society of New York and the New York Florists' Club, in co-operation with other organizations.

Horticultural exhibits have taken on added significance, for the growing of flowers and raising of vegetables will play a vital part in the all-out-for-victory campaign being waged all over the United States. They will prove a balm and succor from the bitterness of the world-wide conflict. Working in gardens will tend toward better health, and the perfume and beauty of flowers will help build morale.

Mrs. Draper will serve as a judge at the International Flower Show in the flower arrangement class, the subject in which she ranks as an authority. Mrs. Webster has been personally complimented by having an invitation extended her to explain and demonstrate a line arrangement to show the public the different steps in the arrangement of flowers.

The choice of plant material has been left to Mrs. Webster by Mrs. Paul Sturdevant, chairman of the demonstration class, who invited Mrs. Webster to stage the exhibit.

Mrs. Harris, Mrs. Webster, Mrs. Thornton, and Mrs. Davis will be delegates from the Peachtree Garden Club at the Garden Club of America meeting to be held on the same dates as the flower show. Mrs. Egan will attend the meeting of the National Council of Garden Clubs, as president of the Garden Club of Georgia, the sessions to be held during the flower show dates.

The surgical dressings division of the Red Cross, at 850 West Peachtree street, will reopen its workrooms Monday, after having been closed for a short while to await the arrival of new supplies. Volunteers who have been reporting for work on Tuesday evening are requested to report at 5:30 o'clock, instead of at the hour observed previously.

THAT DEBONAIRE, talented and good-looking concert artist, Nelson Eddy, is an air warden in Brentwood, Cal., where he and his charming wife live in an attractive residence. He knows all there is to know about precautions in air raids in his community, and took the Red Cross course in first aid.

The night after his concert in Atlanta, he strolled into the ballroom at the Georgian Terrace, where 75 young women were being instructed in first aid by Mrs. Mildred Hershberg. The distinguished baritone singer of stage and screen fame lay down on the floor and pretended he was injured in an air raid. Immediately he was surrounded by first-aiders who were willing and anxious to administer their services.

Mr. Eddy praised them for their knowledge of this subject and stressed the importance of finishing the first aid course. In demonstrating what is known as the "fireman's carry," he took diminutive Mrs. Matilda Gallanti in his arms and carried her to a safety point far from the imaginary raging flames. The girls were so excited they forgot to ask him to autograph their Red Cross books.

In his talk to the class, he said: "I'm glad to see young women of Atlanta taking advantage of an opportunity to prepare for emergencies that confront us. They certainly seem to be energetic and earnest in their effort, and it seems to me that if I ever got hurt or half-drowned, I can't think of better hands to be in than the girls I saw tonight. I trust that the young men of the city, who are not in the service, are equally active."

AN EXQUISITE French voile dress trimmed in real lace was sent to Atlanta, all the way from Melbourne, Australia, to be worn by little Belinda Mary Tully for her christening, which took place Thursday afternoon at St. Luke's Episcopal church. The dress was a gift from her grandmother, Mrs. A. H. Towell, and her aunt, Mrs. T. Paterson, both of Melbourne.

The baby is the eight-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alan C. Tully, of 224 Peachtree Battle avenue, charming newcomers to Atlanta from Australia. The baby was christened at 4 o'clock, with Rev. John Moore Walker, rector of the church, officiating in the presence of a limited number of friends. The baby bears the name of her godmother, Miss Mary Walker, of San Dinos, Cal. The latter was unable to be present for the services and Mrs. George P. Rosser Jr. served as godmother by proxy. Harry A. Mack, of Dayton, Ohio, is godfather for the baby.

WHEN little John H. Mullin III is christened this afternoon at 5 o'clock in the Winship chapel of the First Presbyterian church he will have two grandmothers, one grandfather and two great-grandparents in attendance!

The baby is the nine-month-old son of John and Dorothy Ewing Mullin and his grandparents are Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Ewing and Mrs. John H. Mullin. Mr. and Mrs. Morris Ewing are his great-grandparents. The silver bowl to be used for the christening service is the same used when John's father was christened. The baby is the fourth in direct line to bear the same name, and he will wear a handsome suit given him by his grandmother, Mrs. Mullin. His topcoat is a gift from his grandmother Ewing.

Dr. William V. Gardner will officiate at today's services, and standing with the baby will be his uncle and aunt, George Ewing and Mrs. Jack Eastland.

Miss Margaret Jones Weds Lieut. W. L. Bassett, U. S. A.

Mr. and Mrs. W. Bradford Jones announce the marriage of their daughter, Miss Margaret Jones, to William L. Bassett, first lieutenant, United States Army, the ceremony having been quietly solemnized last Friday afternoon at 5:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's close friend, Miss Helen Miller, at 1327 Peachtree street. Dr. Robert Burns read the marriage service.

Miss Shirley Jones, the bride's only sister, was her maid of honor and only attendant. S. A. Kemp served as Lieutenant Bassett's best man.

The lovely young bride chose for the ceremony a dressmaker suit of defense blue woolen, which she wore with a blue hat trimmed in varied tones of blue and putunia. Her bag and shoes were of putunia, and her flowers were a shoulder cluster of orchids.

Snow Comes To Dixie

Anita, David and Ninetta Wall (left to right), the children of Mr. and Mrs. Sharpe D. Wall, were delighted when March "came in like a lion" with a record snowfall.

Merriment reigned when they harnessed their pet pony, "Queenie," to the pony cart, and went cantering in Jack Frost's "Winter Wonderland." Their happy smiles indicate that they are oblivious of the chilly temperatures which accompanied the south's first blizzard of the season. Hundreds of children, like the youthful trio above, spent the day sledding and pelting each other with snowballs. And camera addicts went gloriously mad, clicking snow scenes to adorn their Christmas cards.

Miss Marie Sheffield Weds Mr. Hill, of Maryville, Tenn.

Delicate pale pink tones were chosen by Miss Marie Sheffield for the color scheme of her wedding to Eldred C. Hill, which was solemnized yesterday afternoon at 4 o'clock at the little chapel of Glenn Memorial church.

Rev. Eugene C. Few performed the ceremony. Mrs. L. G. Martin, vocalist, and Dick Felder, organist, presented a program of music. Urns of pale pink gladioli interspersed with candelabra which held lighted pink tapers decorated the interior of the church. Clusters of pink gladioli tied with pink tulle marked the family pews.

Serving as ushers were Holder Smith, of LaGrange, and Beeman Martin. Acting as best man was J. L. Kelly.

Ash rose taffeta trimmed with matching lace and wine velvet ribbon fashioned the bouffant gown worn by the maid of honor, Miss Bevelyn Howard. She carried a bouquet of pale pink roses and sweet peas.

Robert L. Sheffield gave his daughter in marriage. Her gown of blush satin further accented the bride's brilliant loveliness. The gown was made with a low waistline and gathered bodice which featured a V neckline. The bouffant skirt extended to form a train at the back. Her veil of illusion tulle was caught to a coronet of seed pearls. She carried a bouquet of pink orchids and sweet peas tied with pink satin ribbon streamers adorned with sweetheart roses. Her only ornament was a single strand of pearls, a gift of the groom.

A wreath of pink sweet peas surrounded the base of the tiered cake which centered the bride's table, which was overlaid with a cream lace cloth. Crystal candelabra holding lighted pink tapers completed the table appointments.

Assisting in entertaining were Misses Martha Cochran, Nelle Hardy, Betty Jones, of Rome, and Mrs. John Seay.

Mr. Hill and his bride departed for a wedding trip, after which they will reside in Maryville, Tenn. For traveling Mrs. Hill donned a powder blue wool suit worn with a rose crepe blouse and navy accessories. Completing her costume was a shoulder cluster of pink orchids.

Guests from a distance who attended the wedding were Mr. and Mrs. James W. Hill, of Cowan, Tenn.; Miss Betty Jones, of Rome; Miss Betty Oatman, of Maryville, Tenn.; Lieutenant James W. Hill III, of Anniston, Ala.; Holder Smith, of LaGrange, and Mrs. Harry Stewart Jr., of Roanoke, Virginia.

Madison, Editor.

The following message on the "Oath of Allegiance" is from the state chairman of patriotic anniversaries, Mrs. J. Conrad Puder, Savannah: "In this day of serious threat to American ideals, we know of no single phase of act that serves as so important a symbol as the oath of allegiance. It typifies everything our form of government stands for 'one nation indivisible'—a nation so united will not fall. History records the winter of 1777-1778, when Washington's troops were encamped at Valley Forge, as being the darkest hour of the American revolution. Out of the suffering of that perilous campaign was born the spirit of true Americanism. This is our heritage, unchanged and unyielding through all the troublous times of our history. Let us, today, pray that we may have the courage and strength of our forefathers in keeping this land of ours, the land of the free."

This happened some time ago, but illustrates one of the values of individual membership cards issued annually by Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Leon Meadows, of LaGrange, was traveling and one day when she went out to take a side trip, she left her money in the hotel where she was stopping. A necessary check required definite identification, so she produced her membership card from the LaGrange Woman's Club, which was all she needed. Numbers of federated clubs have not asked for membership cards, which are sent out from federation headquarters, Henry Grady hotel, Atlanta. Just send to the secretary, Mrs. Harvie Jordan, a list of members who have paid 1942 dues and the cards will be sent to the club treasurer for distribution. April closes the fiscal year of Georgia Federation of Women's Clubs.

Jackson is president, will be official hosts to the fourth district convention, which will be held in Hogansville on Saturday, March 21. Mrs. R. C. Fryer, of Manchester, district president, will preside over the deliberations and there will be a speaker from state headquarters of civilian defense. Texas Clubwomen Prepare Entertainment for Conclave

By MRS. ALBERT M. HILL, of Greenville, General Federation Director for Georgia.

Texas clubwomen are planning for the entertainment and enjoyment of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, April 27-May 2. The convention will be held in Fort Worth, with meetings in the Will Rogers Memorial Auditorium and Coliseum. Other gatherings will take place at the Fort Worth Woman's Club, one of the city's beauty spots.

Hotel Texas will be official headquarters and the Blackstone will be Junior headquarters. The convention will be one of the most important in the history of the federation and clubwomen are urged to attend. With the theme "Pan Americanism," we will have a rare opportunity to increase our knowledge and understanding of our neighbors. We will receive latest information concerning the defense program of our organization.

As one clubwoman expressed her reasons for going to Fort Worth: "For the purpose of further co-ordinating our efforts in all defense activities; for intensifying our activities in promoting a closer relationship with all Americas; to perfect plans for the future; and to have the needed stimulation of personal contact with each other. It is imperative that we meet in Texas."

A post-convention trip to Mexico is planned and the General Federation chairman of international relations, Mrs. Nancy Ruple Armstrong, of Houston, writes: "The Mexican people are known for their warm hospitality and gracious manners. They are proving their solidarity in their co-operation with the United States in this trying period. A group of clubwomen visiting the beautiful country of Mexico will do much toward advancing true friendly relations."

Let us consider it a privilege to go to Fort Worth and Mexico and resolve to make the most of this opportunity. It will be wonderful to see Texas in the spring. The February issue of The Clubwoman features Texas and Mexico. Include these articles on your club program, for information and inspiration. Make train and hotel reservations early.

The Need for Thrift

Americans generally are today relearning an ancient lesson. That is the necessity of thrift. After years in which they have spent as they pleased, under the pleasant theory that the more rapidly money is placed in circulation the more prosperity there is for all, Americans have suddenly discovered that, to pay for the war, to provide its essential materials, they must reform their ways of economic life.

No longer is it the sign of miserliness to count, carefully, each nickel before it is spent. For that is the way to have money to pay taxes, to buy defense stamps. No longer does the average American consider how he can "keep up with the Joneses," in the showy adjuncts of life. Instead he seeks to set an example to "the Joneses" in doing without.

The day is slowly but steadily coming when any individual who wears new and costly clothes, who indulges in luxuries or entertainments beyond the reach of his neighbors will be looked at askance and his patriotism placed in doubt.

This new and thrifty way of life has already been accepted as necessary by the vast majority of people. Some things they must go without, the office of civilian supply and price administration has simply taken them away. Other things are going. But, on-top of these enforced restrictions, Americans are learning to impose their own, individual denials. They are learning there are so many things they can do without.

However, while individual Americans are fast learning the new economy of thrift, there is a disturbed feeling among the public that the lesson has not yet been learned as it should be by many of those who occupy important positions in the government. Nor has congress, they feel, caught up with the country in this realization of the necessity for denial.

They read of branches of the government which, in submitting their budgets to congress for appropriations for the coming year, have barely begun to trim the non-essential costs. They read where the Department of Agriculture, for instance, asks $8,000,000 for traveling expenses for the coming year. And they wonder if there is not a large portion of that costly traveling which could be dispensed with at no injury to the war effort.

They remember the multitudinous pamphlets and publications gotten out and distributed by many governmental bureaus, and they are inclined to agree with that congressman who declared "you can't beat Japs or Nazis by throwing booklets at them."

They realize, once again, that congress is too amenable to the pressure brought by every bureau which fights to retain its appropriation in full, war or no war. They know that congressional committees have pointed out, again and again, how non-war spending may easily be reduced by two or three billion dollars, and they are growing more impatient as they wait for the financial ax to go to work.

As always, the people of America are ahead of their Washington representatives. It seems to take so long for the public will to penetrate into the understanding of the congress.

Now, what the people want is all-out devotion to the one task of the winning of the war. They realize that to do this necessitates the elimination of all frills and furbelows from the national way of doing things. They are eliminating the corresponding frills from their individual lives.

The people know that maintenance of the American way of life is desirable. But they are not only willing, they are anxious that every item of expense in that way of life that can be foregone, be eliminated for the duration. Whether that item affects individual indulgence or comfort, or whether it involves governmental travel, governmental conferences which, even though normally valuable could now be forgotten, and all other governmental waste.

There are many activities and expenses which, normally advisable, we can now do without. The people demand that government officials and congress quickly realize this same truth and prune out of the federal costs every penny that does not directly contribute to the winning of the war.

Fiddling While Rome Burns

If news reports from London are true, the Conservative element in Britain's government is guilty of an attitude which may well, in future years, be classified as the most tragic and blind blunder of the entire war.

It is stated that a government plan to grant greater independence to India has been postponed because these Conservative elements, both in London and New Delhi, consider the proposals "too advanced." It is almost inconceivable that British leaders, with the Japanese enemy even now knocking at the gates to India through Burma, with British arms in the Pacific reeling from one reverse after another, should bring about any delay whatsoever in granting full dominion status to India.

True, India may not be quite ready for such status, if times were normal. But this is war, a war that is not going well for the Allied Nations, especially in the Pacific. The price of full, enthusiastic, complete co-operation by a nation of 400,000,000 people is an independence as complete as that enjoyed by any Dominion of the British Commonwealth. It is a low price to pay.

If India is now refused the independence for which she hungers, the pro-Allied-Nation leaders, like Gandhi and Nehru, will be discredited with their own people. Chandra Bose, the pro-Axis Indian leader, is quite apt to seize the opportunity of the resultant wave of resentment and carry India into the Axis camp. This is no time for fiddling. Not only Rome, but the entire world is in flame. Instead of quibbling over technicalities and "degrees" of independence, British leaders should be acting without delay to grant to India whatever form of government she desires, before it is too late. For there is excellent chance that, if India does not herself stop the Japs, it will be the Axis and not Britain that will decide the future of India, as well as most other nations—including Britain.

—WORK AND SAVE FOR VICTORY—

Of No Consequence

In past years, at this season, American followers of professional sport have been duly interested and excited about the annual crop of "holdouts" among baseball players. These are the men who refuse to report for spring training because of dissatisfaction with the financial terms of the contracts sent them for signing by the baseball clubs to which they are affiliated.

This year, by scanning the sport pages of the daily newspapers, the antics of a fairly large crop of "holdouts" may be pictured. It is said they are employing lawyers and "managers" to act as go-betweens in their efforts to make their employers raise the proffered salaries.

But, really, who cares about such things, this year? What does it matter whether this or that player receives the salary he considers fair valuation for his services on the diamond? There is a war on. A war for our very existence as a nation. The enemy is, literally, pounding ever nearer our own doorsteps. The question of a professional athlete's salary is of less than no consequence.

There is much to be said on both sides of the argument as to the advisability of continuing professional sport during the war. It is to be doubted, however, if many Americans will feel comfortable, mere spectators in a grandstand, when they might be working, contributing their part to the production of war material so urgently needed. It is to be doubted if there will be, this summer, much interest in the outcome of pennant races, when so much depends upon the outcome of contests on the battlefields of the earth, where the stakes are life or death for nations, as well as individuals. What parent can care whether the home team or the visitors win a baseball game, when his son is in the game that is played with planes and bombs and bullets and bayonets?

On the other hand, attendance at an occasional game may be good for morale, may provide desirable temporary relaxation from the strains and emotions of war. Even so, though, the quality of play won't mean so much as it has. A game between erstwhile sand-lotters, but now representing their respective Army units, would be better to watch than any game between paid athletes.

Both the baseball magnates and the baseball players should realize, quickly, that interest in the wares they have to offer this summer will be small. And haggling over salary contracts under present world conditions doesn't endear either magnates or players to the public.

The popular baseball players this year are those already wearing the uniforms of their nation's armed services. As to the others, what pay they receive is, to the general public, a matter of absolute indifference.

ONE WORD MORE

By RALPH MCGILL

THEY MIGHT ASK DEMPSEY Maybe you never heard about Ted Williams. Unless you read the sports pages you wouldn't know he was the greatest hitter to come along in 20 years.

He batted .406 for the Boston Red Sox last year. It had been 20 years since anyone had done that. Harry Heilmann, of the Detroit Tigers, batted in the days when Ty Cobb was running the base paths and fretting opposing pitchers and catchers night unto fits, batted .403.

No one had hammered out as much as .400, despite the rabbit blood of the modern baseball, until Ted Williams did the job. (Ty Cobb, of Royston, Ga., once hit .420.)

Ted Williams was just a good hitter, the batting champion of the American league, until a few days ago when his case, on appeal, was settled by the Washington office of Selective Service.

His board had put him in Class 1. The appeal, all the way to Washington, put him back in Class 3, with his mother as support. It was legitimate. He does support his mother. His lawyer made the appeal without consulting Williams, who was away from home.

But, you can put Ted Williams down right now as the most unhappy man in baseball. He is going to be mistreated, booed and misunderstood. His career will be blackened. They'll call him slacker and draft dodger.

If he is smart he will volunteer and get it over with. It is a sad commentary on our hysteria in wartime, and on human nature in general. But now and then the meanness and the orneriness of us will come out. We won't let Williams alone.

Williams' family is broken up. His mother and father are separated and for some reason Williams, while contributing to his mother's support in a substantial manner, doesn't go home. His draft board, misunderstanding, put him in Class 1. It wasn't proper and those who knew went to an attorney who formally presented, as a friend, all the evidence to Washington.

He made Williams a marked man. He might ask Jack Dempsey if he is in any doubt.

DEMPSEY'S CASE Jack Dempsey was a young fighter when the First World War came along. He was just a kid and his manager saw in him great possibilities. They handled him and advised him.

He had come up that far the hard way and he knew how to work. He was a skilled worker and he got a job in the shipyards. Now in that war, as in this, ships are of major importance. The chief reason we are not at this moment able to accomplish something in the Pacific is that we are short of ships. We have about two-thirds as many as we need and we are losing them along the coast and in battle.

Shipyard work can't be done by doddering old men or teen-age boys. Dempsey was a shipyard worker. He stayed with it all through the war.

When it was done he was subjected to violent and unreasonable abuse. He was called a slacker. They booed him when he went into the ring to fight. He was accused of being a coward, a slacker, a draft-dodger.

They even had a sort of "trial" and Dempsey was exonerated by the American Legion hearing. It did no good.

When time came for the fight with the French soldier, Georges Carpentier, the Orchard Man, Dempsey was given the back-hand by many of the sports writers. Several Legion posts sent Carpentier notes wishing him victory. All the people with mean, vicious little minds sent Dempsey anonymous letters hoping Carpentier knocked his ears back. They called him slacker and coward.

THE CARPENTIER FIGHT Dempsey told me in later years that when he came out to go into the ring for the fight with the Frenchman, he wore, as the world's champion, the American flag at his belt.

He said he was half afraid the crowd would boo him. He was hurt and mean himself, all on edge emotionally and physically. He had no sense of wrong and he had been roughed.

When he came out to fight there were a few boos. But not many.

The drama of it had got the crowd. Here was an American fighting a Frenchman. They wanted the American to win. Most of those present let out a roar. The boos faded into it.

No one ever booed Dempsey again. He won them. Carpentier had no chance. Dempsey was a great fighter. He took Carpentier's famed right hand flash on the jaw and didn't stop. He flattened the Frenchman in the fourth round.

The crowd stood and gave him an ovation. They wiped out, in that ovation, all the bitterness accumulated through the years of unfairness and harsh words. Dempsey became one of the most popular men in the nation. Still in the prime of years, he is a legend. He is a sounder legend, too, than many of those whose fame is un tarnished. He was an all-right guy. And still is.

Ted Williams may as well go and enlist. If not he will hear, from the crowded stands, the boos of the crowd and the shouts of "slacker" and "draft-dodger." They will hurt him. I don't know why. It's just our way.

No More Typewriters. So we are not permitted to buy new typewriters. We are not even to rent one. And those we have under rental agreement are to be returned to the dealer.

At least that is how I understood the story about the most recent order of the office of civilian supply.

In some respects it will probably be a good thing. Think of all the time and money and paper and boxes and paper that is wasted by typewriters that are hopeless, but would-be, authors. The order may result in greater conservation than even its promulgator imagined.

The machine on which this is typed is not new. Only about a year. So there seems little chance, from that source, of relief from these daily outpourings.

While on the personal angle, we have a portable typewriter at home on which everything from the late Gordon Neil's letters, which were most newspapermen I have known can turn out fairly clean copy it speed that at least equals that of the average typist who has spent months and a nice fee on learning how.

Some reporters can make the machine fly at almost champion speed with those same two or three fingers. I remember the late Britt Craig, for one, who would pull sheet after sheet from his machine, when racing against press time on some important story, at a speed which made a copy boy keep up a continuous trot between Britt's desk and the copy desk.

One of the most peculiar newspaper typists of memory was the late Gordon Neil. I remember him as a well-known newspaper character years ago. He covered the police court run, and others, for The Constitution.

Hurtel was the only man I ever knew who actually stammered on the typewriter. He was so nervous that, when he set down to write, he would frequently hit the same key many times before he could go on to the next. Just like many stammerers his chief trouble was with the "s."

I've read a copy and had to pencil out whole lines of "s" sometimes. It would go something like this: "SSSS  simple SSSS S S SSS sss Simon ought to hhhh h h have been the n n n name of a mmmmm who wassss as a arrested sss s s shortly after sssssssss even o'clock last night."

But he was a good reporter and wrote a good story, once you had eliminated the excess alphabet.

One Letter At a Time. But one of the oddest users of a typewriter was Ed Bruffey, another famous old Constitution reporter who reached the final 30 of his career years ago.

He began reporting the days before typewriters were generally used in newspaper offices. He was the star man for The Constitution for many years, covering everything from police cases, riots, politics, sermons, conventions to prize fights when John L. Sullivan was the champion.

Late in his career they gave him a typewriter to use, instead of the pencil with which he had always written copy. It was one of those early model typewriters, where you couldn't see the paper on which you wrote. Had to lift up the carriage if you wanted to see what you had written.

Ed was always doubtful if the machine was doing the job. Doubtful subconsciously, I guess. Anyway, he would always strike a key with one finger, and then, before he struck another, lift the carriage with the other hand to see if it was correct. A long and tedious job for him, by the way, but a habit he couldn't break.

When I came to The Constitution Ed had retired and was living on a pension. But he would come to the office occasionally with a story he had picked up and we kept that old model typewriter for years, over in the corner, for his special use. He would touch no other.

Ed stood about four and a half feet in thick-soled shoes. He had a picture of himself and John L. Sullivan, standing together, of which he was very proud. John L. had autographed it. Ed's favorite joke was, when showing it, to say "That's Sullivan, on the right."

SPIRITUAL COMMUNISM.

When war came to England, with its murderous attack upon the ancient liberties of the people, the Nazi bombs threatened also the safety of the most precious records and symbols of those liberties.

For this reason one of the four originals of the priceless Magna Charta was brought to this country for safety. Then when the war came to us, the Magna Charta, the Declaration of Independence, and the Constitution of the United States, were deposited together in a place of secret safety, until victory over the enemies of human freedom shall make both the substance and the symbols of liberty secure.

When I first read of this most significant rendezvous of the great charters of liberty, there came to my mind the earliest record we have of a group of disciples of Jesus after His ascension. "The multitude of them that believed were of one heart and soul; and not one of them said that aught of the things which he possessed was his own, but they had all things in common." While the crude translation of their faith in a community of interests, proved men, and since, to be impractical, its underlying principle has been revealed as universal truth. Nothing which a man possesseth should be held for himself alone, because the vital welfare of others is involved both in the manner in which he acquired his possessions, and the use which he makes of them.

Total War. Now we are involved in a "total war," and this principle is being vividly translated in terms of national need for all of our possessions, in order that we may save any of our possessions. No man will be allowed to call anything his own—rubber, metals, oil, food, clothing—but we must have all things in common for the common defense. And when some Ananias holds back "a part" from the common "arsenal"—a tire, a bag of sugar, a day's work, or greedy profits—he is a common enemy of the common good.

But this principle has an even larger significance. We are rightly speaking of this as a World War. Every tribe and tongue, every business and home, every purpose and plan, and every faith and hope, of every man in the world is involved in its result. There is just one earth from which the human race can be fed and clothed, and furnished with the resources for a life of happiness and health, and in the flaming fury of this war, it is being revealed as never before, that no nation (nor group of nations) has a right to hold these resources as its own, but that the day must come when all the peoples of the earth may have them in common.

Before anyone dismisses that as fantastic and impractical, let him consider what is happening before his eyes today, and of which each one of us is a very real part. Before Pearl Harbor, and the formal declarations of war, we had already declared in the "lend-lease" act that the nations which were fighting Germany were fighting our battle, and that the "things which we possessed" would not be held as our own, but that the defenders of liberty around the world would have "all things in common." That is the meaning of being the arsenal of democracy. And that is the meaning of the military front and the economic front, which we have made with our Allies around the world. So dangerous and deadly is the challenge of the Axis powers to the very existence of the other nations, that in this close alliance we have laid down the fundamental principle that not one of us shall say "that aught of the things which we possess is his own, but that we shall have all things in common."

Total Peace. Of course, we are saying that now because we are convinced that is the only way we can win a world war. But isn't that the only way we can ever win a world peace? No doubt there are many of our people who are longing for the day when we can unscramble the vital interests of the nations, and no doubt we will hear again at the close of this war that slogan which led us to the lowest level of our nation's life at the close of the last war, "back to normalcy." But we must not repeat that tragedy. The boys who die in war, and who don't die in war, is not "normal" for us to strive to live in national isolation, carelessness of the welfare of all the other peoples of the world. And the last 20 years, with first its orgy of indecent self-indulgence followed by a decent economic and spiritual depression, a prelude to another still more destructive war, has proven it beyond any rational contradiction.

The bringing of Magna Charta to keep safe company with the Declaration of Independence means that not only our material possessions, but those infinitely greater spiritual possessions, can not be held as the sole blessing of one nation, but must be shared as the common inheritance of all men. Magna Charta and the Bill of Rights are not British or American possessions, but as our Declaration proclaimed, they are "inalienable rights" with which "all men are endowed by their Creator."

We have called this a world war, and there never can be any other kind of war. We must see to it that it is followed by a world peace, for there can be no other kind of peace. Then the principles upon which that peace is builded will be world-wide in their application. In some way the nations of the earth must be leagued together to see that the good things of the world, and the good life of

April at Chateau-Thierry

Tread lightly, April, this is hallowed ground. Tread lightly as your lyric feet can pass, And sprinkle, with no shadow of a sound, Bright crocuses along the tender grass. Let lilacs softly burst in bloom again, And spread a carpeting of violets For silver sandals of the quiet rain. That glitters like the flash of bayonets. Light up the hills with tulips' wind-blown flame As acolytes would light an altar-stone. Twine poppies far too lovely for a name Around the lonely crosses one by one. Tread lightly, April, soft and crystal-clear . . . A generation's April slumbers here.

During the past two or three years the world has become accustomed to the hourly relinquishment of many of its treasured possessions, and it is every hour tably its fabulously rich cities.

London has been all but felled to its knees, only to rise again and again, more defiant than ever. Warsaw, Amsterdam, Brussels, Singapore, Hongkong, have now but moldering memories of their former glory.

Greece and Crete have been ground beneath the heel of the maniacal conqueror. Java and Sumatra, perhaps the last remaining outposts of an earthly paradise, their deep thickets of wild green jungles starred with fiery flowers, the hot, motionless leaves of the undergrowth breathing a long slow hiss of peace, have at last fallen beneath his tread.

No longer farflung stretches of calm blue seas, isolated coral reefs and palm-studded islands know quietude, the hushed footfall of the tropic wind. The belch of shellfire is hard upon them, their quota of earth's strange cargo of streamlined death.

Now Paris, spared to France as a bewildering gesture of Herr Hitler, seems almost destined for the will to tread to this is an age when nothing survives.

Why SPARED SO LONG? The recent successful attack by the Royal Air Force upon the numerous German-controlled factories on the outskirts of Paris, presages her fate. One only wonders, as an astute commentator pointed out a day or two ago, why these Royal Air Force attacks have not occurred much earlier, since industrial Paris is hourly turning out in such manner weapons of war for the Fuehrer's armies. And it would be nothing less than a miracle if stray bombs did not find their way into the city proper.

To many citizens of the world Paris is the one true fulfillment of a dream. Truly is everything the heart has grown to expect, and more. She is all the cities of the world poured into one, and yet, strangely enough, she is unlike any of them—a city set apart, rising on proud stones, mortared by an enviable history.

Through the years Paris has lived in her space of breath. But she has been more than generous in giving to the world an unsurpassed wealth of deathless memories. And for that alone man can kneel in gratitude, for in whatever future world he may shape out of the fire and smoke of today's battle, a memory of something that was great can prove a sturdy cornerstone.

Does the present year, and the coming series of all-out attacks by Britain and her allies, foretell her end? Perhaps she has served her day, lived in her space of breath. But she has been more than generous in giving to the world an unsurpassed wealth of deathless memories. And for that alone man can kneel in gratitude, for in whatever future world he may shape out of the fire and smoke of today's battle, a memory of something that was great can prove a sturdy cornerstone.

CRUMBLING Now Paris once more sees the world crumbling about her eaves, falling, hour by hour, beside her feet. Perhaps her eyes have grown tired, old and weary, worn that she is, of watching the long slow curve of centuries foaming and breaking upon the shores of time. Perhaps her fingers have grown numb from bathing the wounded and the dying, trying to patch together again the recurrent trials and troubles and tribulations of men.

The Pulse of the Public

The Constitution invites expression of opinion by its readers. This column is for that purpose. All contributions must be signed and all are subject to editing for conservation of space. Brevity makes argument effective and impels attention.

WHAT FREEDOM MEANS TO AMERICAN SOLDIER Editor, Constitution: Our freedom, to me, is that intangible something, born of revolution, nurtured by civil strife, matured from world conflict, and eternally aged in the hearts of those men and women, who forever fight for it.

Our freedom is as indispensable as air essential as food, as necessary as life itself. Our freedom, like a beacon light, lights our way to final victory.

Our course is chosen, our positions are placed, soon, the enemy will be beaten. He will walk again the path of peace—a final peace, a glorious peace, a perfect peace.

God hasten that day. FORT CARLTON GIBSON PVT. BENNING, GA.

NEALEY NOT JUSTIFIED SAYS VOLUNTEER WARDEN. Editor, Constitution: In reference to Mr. Nealey's statement in The Constitution Thursday, March 5, saying air wardens would not show up at class to be taught anything. All they wanted was sleeveband, to be big shots and authority.

I would like to say for myself I don't think Mr. Nealey is justified in saying what he did. I was appointed air warden, as fireman, and did not hesitate to serve. I took a course of ten (10) hours, which I was asked to do.

I then was informed I had to take twenty (20) hours course of training in first aid, which I am now doing, and up to present date I have put in sixteen (16) hours. I am employed in one of the hotels in the city. I work all night, and when I get off I am tired after covering hotel for ten (10) hours, going to bed, getting up at 5 p. m. so you can see it is not so easy for one to learn much of first aid.

However, I am taking the course of twenty (20) hours which is required, but I would like to say this for myself, a man working all night seven (7) nights doesn't have much time to study first aid.

Furthermore, they really expect a man to do too many things. I think in my own case as a fireman I would have all I could do to fight fires in case we have to. I men, must be for "all men." If we are able to make the material and spiritual resources of the nations an arsenal for the purpose of winning a war for mankind, surely we can make of those same resources a treasury for the perpetuation of peace and prosperity for all men.

think Mr. Nealey was not right saying "they won't show up." Bands—L. for one, did not ask for it. I am willing to do anything that I can to help. Why don't they round up the loafers that hang out all night in restaurants, and a pool rooms all day from the time they open, they close and put them to doing something?

I wish to state that I am too old, and sorry to say I can't join the army as I am 62 years of age. If he would stop to think how much there is in the Red Cross first aid textbook I don't think Mr. Nealey could get it all in his head, and wonder if Mr. Nealey will be around in case we should have a real air raid, I can say for myself I know I will unless I am sick in bed. I did not ask to be made an air warden, and can do just as much for my Uncle Sam with the sleeveband as without it, as I for one am not looking for any glory. Let everyone do a little and the U. S. A. will come out on top.

GEORGE A. DAVIS, Atlanta.

PYLE SHOULD BE TOLD ABOUT SUGAR SITUATION Editor, Constitution: Your esteemed newspaper carried a column writer Ernie Pyle, in which he stated that he ate in hotel coffee shop in which he was served only three cubes of sugar for a cup of coffee. He evidently doesn't know what is going on in this country or doesn't have one spark of patriotism in his system. He should have a good, long talk with your Ralph Jones, he probably could advise him of conditions as they are.

On February 20, the hotel and restaurant men had a meeting, at which time we were advised by Mr. Mitchell, who is one of the assistant managers of the War Production Board, that we would be forced to buy 20 per cent less sugar this March than we bought last March, and it was suggested that we serve only one spoon of sugar to the cup of coffee.

It was also explained that it took 125,000 spoons of sugar to fire one 16-inch gun. I personally figured out that this means it takes 2,500 pounds to do the job. Any man who writes for a newspaper should be sensible enough to know that no restaurant man would do anything to hurt his business under any conditions other than to help his country. Believe me, if I thought it would help just in a small way I would refuse to serve an ounce of sugar in my place, and believe me, I need all the business I can get. C. L. EDDLEMAN, Atlanta.

Dreams and Dust

Learning To Be a Cop.

We take back all the derisive things we ever said about cops. We are now in the processing of becoming one, and if anybody makes any cracks we will rap him on the skull with our night-stick.

Since we started learning how to become a policeman we have been trying to analyze our ancient disrespect for them, and we think it traces back to the fact that we were a small-town boy.

Small-town boys, we believe, never looked upon the policeman as either a fearsome or a heroic figure. He was merely a large, paunchy, middle-aged gentleman with an amiable disposition and a walrus mustache who was fair game for any nimble-legged fruit-scraper who could either outwit him or outrun him.

He was adroit in his main job, which was hauling the town drunk off to the calaboose every Saturday night, carefully putting this process off until the aforesaid drunk had collapsed amiably in the back of the drug store, and when he was roaring through the colored section, chicken thieves trembled and skin-gamblers fled into the night.

But to the average small-town boy, whose nocturnal sport consisted of orchard theft, ringing doorbells, painting valiant challenges on the water tank, shooting firecrackers at Christmas and drawing black stockings "snakes" beneath the nervous feet of old ladies returning from prayer-meeting, he was not a man to fear. He was merely a perspiring and sometimes angry sloop for pranks.

He Just Suffered.

He could, of course, have shot, and probably winged, his pestiferous hecklers if he had been of a mind to. He could have told their fathers to keep them at home at night or he would throw them in the sneezer. Being a good-natured soul, he did neither. He just suffered.

The thoughts of a small boy, though, are not deep and nobody took these things into account. They just thought of him as a hump-footed old addlepate and, consequently, held him in small esteem.

Unfortunately, we fear, the boy with a small-town background carries this misconception of the policeman's prowess and mentality on into later life. He doesn't do anything to express his derision, of course, growing more prudent as he grows older, but he is prone to feel that the man with the billy and the shield is just a big dumb cluck who couldn't track an elephant through plowed ground.

We now wish to report our own brain purged of this point of view. The old town marshal of our early days may have been neither an athlete nor a mental giant. The average cop of peacetime days may not have been a genius as a sleuth, or a heroic criminal-nabber even when he knew who he was after.

Different Bluecoats.

But the policeman of wartime days is a different kind of blue-coat all together and his amateur helper, the citizen or auxiliary cop, has got to be as smart as he.

Anybody who learns all that the auxiliary policeman must know—who really masters it, that is—can feel qualified to go up to Washington and tell J. Edgar Hoover to move over. He will be a composite picture of J. Edgar himself, Sherlock Holmes, the Detective Whatsname of the Paris Surete, Dick Tracy and Johnny Broderick, with a dash of Superman thrown in.

He will know many things. He will know what to do to prevent looting, panic, and public disorder when a city is blitzed. He will know how to disarm and arrest a man bigger than he and how to place the charge against him so that it will stand up in court.

He will know a great deal about the chemistry of gases. He will know, for instance, that phosgene smells like new-mown hay, and that it goes painlessly but deeply into the lungs, where it forms hydrochloric acid, which in turn sets up a process which literally drowns a man in his own body fluids.

He will know that the fluid in the blisters that mustard gas raises is painful and dangerous, but that the fluid in blisters raised by other vesicant gases and chemicals is not.

About Bombs.

He will know that an incendiary bomb will penetrate three inches of concrete, and will explode if you throw a steady stream of water on it but will go off if you spray it with a fine spray.

He will know how to prevent arson, and how to foil saboteurs and spies. He will know how to guide an Army convoy through a congested city without getting anybody hurt and without halting the flow of military vehicles, and he will know how to soothe and quieten a hysterical citizen gone temporarily insane under a bombing.

He will know enough first aid to stop bleeding, to treat shock, to handle a wounded person correctly. He will know what to do for a person who has been burned by a chemical bomb or who has inhaled a deadly gas. He will even know when the only thing to be done is to say a prayer and go on to the next man.

He will know his other limitations. He may be called upon to help a distracted restaurant man who is troubled with a bunch of soldiers temporarily feeling loose and easy in their minds and throwing bottles of catsup at each other.

This Is the Technique.

"The technique here," says the instructor, "is to stick your head in the door and make a quick survey of the situation. The reason you stick your head in at all is to find out how many MPs to call."

He will even look like a policeman, and if anybody wants to make himself a nice piece of change he can go into the business of outfitting the auxiliary policemen who pretty soon will be clamoring for their martial honors.

He has to have a steel helmet, a pistol, a holster, a billy, a flashlight, a whistle, a raincoat, a pair of dark glasses, a pair of heavy gloves and an arm-band with the police insignia on it. He will be a very fearsome figure when he dons his full array.

We can just see ourselves now, in the dark of a moonless night, pacing our lonely beat trying to remember how to handle a distracted citizen who dashes into the street without his pants.

We will feel very bold, and stern, and able to cope with desperate situations. But we do hope no small boy decides to test our courage by drawing a black stocking snake across our path.

Men at Sea

No argosies with billowed sails are yours—
No wooden craft drift in gentle wind—
No pirate fleet, enriched with golden stores—
Your ships plough deeply through the waves, and cut their course across the men of war, moved on with strong precision;
Machines in tune, as furnaces decree
Freedom's coils—and that, each sailor's vision.
Your port tonight can mean no dreamy place
Where music throbs, and hearts are airy things;
Man now the guns, let every blast scorch
The foe's black vessels, full of adoration—
But after all the burst of flame is done,
Think then of quiet ports when peace is won!
WALTER BLACKSTOCK JR.

Our Country.

My heart doth beat one tune throughout the days and nights,
Each breath I crave to give to help preserve her rights.
America! America!
My mind doth seek but one goal in all its thoughts and aims.
America! America!
In all I do and say, my country has first claim.
America! America!
My soul doth pray but one prayer through all the wakeful hours.
America! America!
May God help us preserve her life with all our human powers.
America! America!
—BESSIE BRUCE HARRIS.

We Fought.

We fought a war to save our liberties 20 years ago,
Then rested on our laurels, our ease, our ego.
Now the cannons, the muskets, are calling us all again,
To fight on land, the sea, the mountains, and plains.
Our shoulders are bent with the past war and years,
Now our sons must take up the fight, we weep tears.
Oh, the tears of regret we harbor; in our hearts, we weep.
For we know of our sons many will rest in the deep.
—DR. L. M. BURROW.

Do It Now

If your part you want to do, do it now.
Don't wait 'til the foe's in view.
Your debt to America is due.
Pay it up, with interest, too; do it now.
If bonds and stamps you should buy, buy them now.
Old Glory must always fly above our heads, 'way up high.
In the blue of God's own sky; buy them now.
If you have a war to fight, fight it now.
It's your country, wrong or right.
Stop the bark and start the bite.
Get your grip and hold on tight; fight it now.
—JOYCE COBB.

Winter Musing

Gray dawn drifts over the hills,
Mist gathers deep along the river banks
Where beeches bend beneath the sweep of winter winds.
My heart weeps for summer skies,
For breath of song upon an April's eve,
For scent of lilac and violet's bloom.
Long has it been since burdened hearts stirred to lift of song, to sunset's glow.
Lips
Ade lost in search of hope,
For where he is the dawn are black,
Where lilacs bloom and April's song are dead.
Yet while the beeches bend beneath the gale,
I see the image of his face,
Unconquerable, bright with victory's smile,
And dreams we knew so long ago.
—LOIS WHITEKER.

'Let's Do Our Part.'

Attention you gardeners, who want to sign up
To help beat the Axis, and help make it tough
For all those poor saps, including the Japs.
We think they have caught us, taking a nap.
Let's build an army, of hoes, forks and rakes
And help give our Uncle a bit of a break.
Let us who have passed the age to enlist
In his regular army, the enemy to resist.
Show our dear Uncle we have hearts strong and true
And so do our part, to help our part to feed
By getting together some fine garden seeds.
We can't all be soldiers and drop bombs from the air
To give the enemy more than a scare.
But the Japs and the Axis, we'll sure help defeat.
By raising some food, our soldiers can eat.
So let's do our part, start a garden right quick.
The sooner we do it the quicker we'll lick
Germans, Italians and treacherous Japs.
Don't waste a moment, but give them a slap.
By putting our shoulder right to the plow.
Don't wait till tomorrow, but do it right now.
And so do our part, to garden to make
By enlisting in the army of hoes, forks and

Chaps Who Know Find Many Flaws And Spoil Stories

People who know—the technical fellows—can bust up more illusions than you dreamed you had. They know too darn much. I had been discussing a story about a hunting dog with John Martin, of the sports staff, who specializes on hunting and fishing, talks about them, dreams about them, writes about them. Martin had read the story and liked it. He said it was beautifully written and it had almost brought tears to his eyes.

"But—" said John Martin. "Take that paragraph where the old man and the boy send the dog after the birds. There are about seven distinct details wrong about that."

And he proceeded to explain. I am sure he was right. But I'll never like that story quite so much as before.

If it had been a story about a chemical laboratory and a beautiful girl spy Martin probably would have no criticism to offer because he knows nothing of the technique of a chemical laboratory. That is, I assume he doesn't. He may.

Magazine editors have told me too many good writers try to write something they don't know about—except casually. I've just read a complaint from a veteran circus man that Courtney Riley Cooper's circus stories revealed an enormous ignorance of the big tops and the sawdust and the animals in the menagerie. I wish I hadn't read that, because Cooper's stories brought to me the full flavor of the circus. The complainant said Cooper had worked with a circus only two years—just to get the local color—and nobody could learn anything—much—about a circus in two years. Well, maybe not.

The magazine editors try to check up on details but many of them slip by. The story satisfies 99 per cent of its readers, but in flow letters from the experts complaining that the writer must never have been within a thousand miles of the background he'd chosen because it isn't like that at all.

I can understand that. I'd hate to attempt a story with an Atlanta background—except a sketchy one. I've lived here some 35 years but I don't know the town—not all of it. Or even much of it.

John in the Country

Shortage of tires, likely to become a total absence of tires, will annoy all of us. It will mean a walk, long or short, to the car line. A horror of war!

I can take that in my stride—If my steps can be termed strides—but I'm thinking of the folk who built homes away out in the country, perhaps 10 miles from public transportation.

Not the rich folk of the big estates. They have always found a way. But of John Smith, who grew tired of living in a near-tenement in a back street, saved up a little money and began payments on a little four-room cottage with a three-acre farm. So his kids could get fresh air and his wife could raise vegetables and flowers.

This John Smith and thousands like him, don't own big and costly cars. Theirs were bought second-hand—or third-hand. They are not luxuries. They are necessities—to get John to his job and take him home. With, maybe, a Sunday drive for everybody, if there is gasoline money.

It's going to be tough on the John Smiths of the nation. Which doesn't so much matter. That's his war sacrifice and he can take it with a grin. What does matter is it's going to be tough on defense production businesses in general. If John can't get to his job who's going to turn out the products? If he must walk 10 miles he won't be very full of pep and energy when he slides into his overalls.

Also, if John can't get to his job how's he going to eat—and keep up payments on his little nest in the country?

The nation comes first. No use kicking. But I hope hoping to get tough, why don't they get at it? Looks to us like five years ago wouldn't have been too soon, and if it takes a dictator to win this war, let's have one right now and send our representatives in Washington back home for the duration of the war on salary of about $2,000 a year!

GOVERNOR IS ASKED PERTINENT QUESTION

Editor, Constitution: In your edition of February 26, The Associated Press reports from a discussion by Governor Talmadge of the suit by Negro teachers for equal salaries.

The Governor says, in effect, that Negroes can live cheaper than white people; but he did not point out which stores sell goods cheaper to Negroes than to whites.

He also stated that Negroes pay less tax than whites; but he did not say that they pay less tax because they get less salaries with which to pay tax. In spite of this

The Pulse of the Public

ISN'T THERE A CEILING ON USED TIRE PRICES?

Editor, Constitution: Legislation should be enacted to control the price of used automobile tires and tubes.

No leader or individual should be lawfully allowed to sell a used tire or tube at a price greater than the current retail price of a new tire.

This control of prices would help to curb the present trend of an unreasonable use in the price of these products and would also discourage the thief who today has a great incentive to steal our tires. VERNON STARR.

WE MUST GET TOUGH IF WE'VE WON THE WAR

Editor, Constitution: I have recently been told of an old lady at Sand Mountain, Ala., who lives on a farm and is 81 years old, not only helped to gather the home crop but also picked two bales of cotton for her neighbors and did not have to do it.

That is what we folks down this way call hitting it on the handle, something we all will have to do if we expect to win this war.

If our government intends to get tough, why don't they get at it? Looks to us like five years ago wouldn't have been too soon, and if it takes a dictator to win this war, let's have one right now and send our representatives in Washington back home for the duration of the war on salary of about $2,000 a year!

GOVERNOR IS ASKED PERTINENT QUESTION

Editor, Constitution: In your edition of February 26, The Associated Press reports from a discussion by Governor Talmadge of the suit by Negro teachers for equal salaries.

The Governor says, in effect, that Negroes can live cheaper than white people; but he did not point out which stores sell goods cheaper to Negroes than to whites.

He also stated that Negroes pay less tax than whites; but he did not say that they pay less tax because they get less salaries with which to pay tax. In spite of this the value placed on Negro real estate in this city for tax purposes is much higher than that for white property of equal value. He might have stated also that Negroes pay taxes but they do not hold office nor vote. Of course, he did not remember that in a democracy an individual doesn't get out in proportion to what he pays in tax. He must know that there are some Negro teachers who pay more tax than some white teachers.

Finally, the Governor is reported as saying that equal salaries will lead to attempts "to admit Negroes to all our schools and public places". I just can't follow this reasoning. It does seem that at some time the Talmadges of this country would grow up and stop quoting these child stories. Atlanta, ROGER WILLIAMS.

MORE ON EQUALITY IN TEACHER SALARIES

Editor, Constitution: I read a release in your paper quoting our Governor on his stand as to equalization of salaries for Negro teachers.

He sets forth that Negro teachers know they are not entitled to equal salaries. How and from what source did our Governor procure his knowledge of what Negroes think and know? Did he make a survey or interview each teacher to secure his or her stand on this issue? He next sets forth that Negro tax returns do not compare with whites, therefore, on this score he should not receive equal salary. This reminds me of a little pup trying to bite his own tail—in other words, it is like debating in a circle. How can Negro teacher purchase enough property to be taxed when the salary range is from $25 to $80? The average teacher cannot live hardly for nine months, not to mention the vacation months, from this starvation wage. Further does my honorable Governor realize that taxes are inclusive in all we buy—rent, clothes, fuel, medicine and what not? Does he think that we just pay for the commodity and the seller dishes the tax out of his own pocket?

Then he further states that standards of living are not equal. He demonstrates a very little knowledge of economics. We have standards of living embracing ad-equated food, clothing, shelter, health, religion, recreation and others, not to forget education. Existence embraces substandards of all these. Existence does not mean growth—it means getting by and doing without the necessities of life. Truly, our standards differ, but not justly so.

Soon, I must go to fight for the United States to perpetuate a country for men like Talmadge. I must go, though I live according to substandards of living, cannot vote and live where men are whipped into a frenzy of hate by men like my Governor. There is not much difference between Talmadge and the Nazi six points against Negroes. Everyone read them for yourselves. Talmadge is a menace to national brotherhood and national unity, not to mention a stain on the general intelligence of our state. BARTLETT VERS.

REMEMBER LAST WORDS OF MARTHA BERRY

Editor, Constitution: The last dictated words of Martha Berry should be meditated upon by every older man and woman in American today. Miss Berry lived her conviction and had the courage of it, therefore, we should listen to what she says about youth having its chance to live a life. What a realization can set up in us older people when we think that maybe (and even surely) we are truly failing the youth of this land. And Miss Berry calls this "failing our Lord." What a waste of youth!

Surely Miss Berry would have wanted them used in creating a world, for she speaks of youth—of human waste when we forget to give girls and boys their divine right to live and live fully. Somebody cared about this and that somebody was Martha Berry. Can we think of any greater Christian for Georgia to be proud of—than Miss Berry?

In Town Meeting of the Air we hear the sensible pleas of youth—Miss Berry seems to have passed on with this plea on her lips. Read her article "That Youth May Have a Chance" in Saturday's Constitution of February 28, 1942.

It is worth remembering well enough to act upon—forever! MRS. ELTON CHAPMAN.

Unbelievable Figures WHICH ARE TRUE

If 12 men work 10 hours a day instead of 8—they gain 24 hours—a day and a night.

If 12 million men work on the same basis—they gain one million days and nights.

Assuming 300 work days to a year, the total gain of those men—in ONE DAY—is 3,333 work years—the equivalent of 3,333 men working 24 hours a day for a year, or 10,000 men working 8 hours a day for a year.

Those figures seem unbelievable—but they are true. Figure it out for yourself. Let the men who are walking out of war production plants at the end of 8 hours of work figure it out.

The most valuable weapon we can develop is TIME—precious hours and days which will speed production of ships and planes and all the munitions of war. That is the biggest advantage which Germany and Japan had over us—the time to prepare for war.

TIME is the essence of our victory. That is why the enemy seeks to war on civilians—to destroy Production Time. Men who destroy time by refusing to work are equally as effective in their result as a completely successful air raid by the enemy.

The hideous part of our TIME DESTRUCTION is that it is being done by men who call themselves loyal Americans. They don't seem to realize that by their very acts they are putting themselves and their families and their liberty and freedom in peril. If they can't understand that then a way must be found to make them understand. WE MUST GAIN TIME.

Mrs. Harrison is the former Miss Nell Walton, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. O. P. Walton, of Atlanta. Mr. and Mrs. James Oscar Harrison, of Loudon, are the paternal grandparents.

Mr. and Mrs. Sanford D. Hill, of College Park, announce the birth of a daughter, Sandra Estelle, on February 11 at Piedmont hospital. The baby will be christened this morning at Fairburn Baptist church.

Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Kaplan announce the birth of a son on February 16 at Piedmont hospital whom they have named Hyman. Mrs. Kaplan is the former Miss Rosalie Cline.

Mr. and Mrs. H. N. Carver Jr., of Malden, Mass., formerly of Atlanta, announce the birth of a daughter, Linda Diane, on December 17. Mrs. Carver is the former Miss Sarah Moore, of Atlanta.

This is how Miss Edwards makes her candle drop beads. Notice how small she makes the drops on the wax paper. Later they are strung on thread.

She Makes Her Own Necklaces

By YOLANDE GWIN.

OF COURSE you are familiar with the old saying, "Necessity is the mother of invention." And when it comes to adapting the old to the new, Jean Edwards has come to the front again with a clever idea which bids fair to eclipse any of the other inventions of this Atlanta belle. She is wearing candle jewelry!

When Atlanta's Miss Edwards heard that the War Production Board had frozen all supplies of tin and tin-bearing materials for costume jewelry, she decided that it would take more than a war, and the absence of materials, to keep her from having a collection of beads, and necklaces.

Jewelry of this type is a fad with her and between classes at Shorter College in Rome, Ga. Miss Edwards is burning the candle at both ends to a very good advantage.

This is her system: She spreads a large piece of wax paper on her desk. Then she lines up her supply of candles—pink, yellow, red, white, and any other color she desires. Lighting the candle, she lets it melt a little and then lets it drip on the paper in small drops. When the drops dry—they are about one-third of the size of a dime—she takes a matching shade of thread and strings them—hundreds of the small drops—to the desired length of a necklace. She does not bother with such intricate things as clasps or fasteners. The necklace is made all in one piece and slipped over the head.

Pastels make up the prettiest, according to Jean, who has a number she uses for her spring outfits. Several colors may be combined for a rainbow effect, also.

Miss Edwards is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. K. E. Edwards, of 127 Avery drive, N. E., Atlanta.

However, if caution is observed and you will go straight to the point of affairs, much can be accomplished quickly.

COOL Heads Are Needed For Those NIGHT FLYERS

AT GUNTER FIELD, ALA., NIGHT over quietly sleeping Georgia towns, bombless planes and fledgling flyers of the Southeast Air Corps Training Center are shaping the destiny of tomorrow's battlefields of the air.

That's why Gunter Field's flying line never sleeps—for at Gunter, a basic school of the Training Center, British and American student pilots get their initiation into the mysteries of flying through an infinity of blackness. Their mid-night flights, though too safe for notice by the press's war-worn type, are designed to give the cadets sharp cat-eyes and instinctive skill for the time they may take real fighting planes up against an enemy attacking behind the opaque smoke screen of night.

This initiation to night flying gives the cadets something more, too. Full-winged pilots, looking backward, agree that it gave them the greatest experience of tense, tingling excitement in the air during their whole training program, exceeding even the thrills of the first solo at primary school.

Any moonless night at Gunter will illustrate: A huge beacon light streaks up to the stars, playing on little red pin-points that are the wing lights of numerous planes already circling aloft in their zones. On the surface of the field powerful floodlights criss-cross and illuminate dozens of ships moving about in a well-defined pattern, some taxiing in, others pulling out.

FIRING THE SIGNAL FOR THE TAKE-OFF

Over in the northwest corner of the runway, plane No. 211 has halted, but its motor continues to roar. An RAF cadet is in the front cockpit with an American officer behind, but the cadet's hands are on the stick. A half-mile away high up in the control tower an officer picks up a gun and aims it dead at 211's front cockpit. He squeezes the trigger, fires.

From his shotgun a green beam of light flashes to the cadet. It's the "go" signal for his first night flight with the controls in his own hands. If he shows little need of the lieutenant tonight, perhaps he'll be soloing up there soon. . . . Thus grimly and excitedly set, he gives it the gun.

The ground is a strange yellow under the glare of the floodlights as the ship skims the surface. When it lifts above the light's level, the cadet feels that he has suddenly left the sun and been hurtled into a pitch black room—but this is a vast one, alive with the roar of hundreds of unseen ships all around. The eerie glow of the exhaust is the only light visible, making on his side. And up there in the void there's no way of feeling one's position.

The cadet bends forward to flick on the cockpit lights, then quickly jerks his hand back, remembering the instructor's warning. "The bright cockpit lights will blind you—and you may never see the horizon."

BLOCKING THE SKY INTO PRIVATE AREAS

But with only the aid of these cockpit lights, kept dimmed to an inky faintness, the cadet must navigate his way to zone three, according to instructions from the control tower before the take-off. Zone three is an imaginary box up there in the sky, drawn with imaginary lines. The whole sky above the field is, in the minds of night flyers, just a huge stack of these boxes, four abreast and each a thousand feet high. Horizontal lines running north-south and east-west to infinity divide the zones abreast. Altimeters set the tops and bottoms. Zone three is the cadet's tonight. Though the ether may be crowded with scores of unseen planes, none will enter the cadet's box.

Climbing into position, he sneaks a glance below. The earth has a strange new face. The strings that were highways and the little landmarks that were buildings—all has disappeared, masked by a strange maze of nothing, speckled with tiny dots of light.

As he navigates into his zone, with intermittent aid from the instructor, the cadet strains forward for his staunch standby of daytime flights, the horizon. It's out there somewhere, he knows, where the blackness of the firmament fades into the slightly different shade of the blackness of the earth. Though indiscernible to him now, it's plain to the experienced officer in the cockpit behind. Soon the cadet will learn to see it immediately, for at some future date when he's flying against an enemy that respects no zones, there will be no time for searching.

Failing to find the horizon, the young pilot looks at the flight indicator on the instrument board. Quickly he banks the ship sharply. The artificial horizon on the panel was pointed at the ground! He had been flying on his side! And up there in the void there's no way of feeling one's position.

With the plane righted, he trains his eyes on the instrument board. Soaring level, he feels what upperclassmen had told him he would: a greater exhilaration than even the thrill of his first ascent into the lighted sky. Then other ships were visible, land was familiar. But here he feels completely isolated in infinity—the only thing existent, hence powerful. And at the same time he feels like a tiny speck of life groping along in a tremendous abyss. Nor is the sensation without fear. After weeks of training, the cadet now is more alive to the perils of the air and to the skilled handling that a complicated basic trainer requires.

Suddenly he's awakened from the reverie by a radio call from the control tower—and he knows his hardest job is yet ahead.

"Gunter Control to zone three. Gunter Control to zone three. Go ahead."

Receiving instructions to come in, he prepares to begin the descent. Through the plane's interphone comes help from the lieutenant who knows the taut mental state of all cadets during their first nighters. "OK—change it into low pitch, change it into low pitch." As the plane nears the field on a set "base leg," the instructor warns quickly.

LEARNING TO LAND WITHOUT A THUMP

"Cut your guns, mister, cut your guns. You're going to overshoot!"

The cadet has mistaken the dust haze atop the floodlights' beams for the earth. He narrowly averts a severe bumping.

He controls the flying cadets.

The ground seems so weird to him. It's not there, yet he must land on it.

To his glad relief, he finally brings her in safely—though not quite for a three-point landing—and happily thinks about taxiing in and talking about the flight, the laconic command from the control tower:

"211 from Gunter Control. Give it the gun and go back to your zone."

Up he must go again. The night has just begun for him. Though still tense, this time the cadet will see the horizon. And in a week he'll be up there flying alone, not just in a zone but miles away on a cross-country flight to Atlanta and back.

With each flight his confidence grows, his hands work more deftly, he reacts with instinctive sureness until night almost turns into day, and the instrument board becomes a substitute for the sun. He is one step nearer the day when he can meet the Jap or German over any land at any hour with bombs and bullets. His story is the story of hundreds and thousands of aviation cadets who are flying through the second phase of their flight training at the Southeast Air Corps Training Center's basic schools, like Gunter Field. That's why tomorrow's battlefields of the air are being decided these nights over quietly sleeping southern towns by fledgling fliers and bombless planes.

A plane above the moonlit clouds.

EARLY MARCH IN THE VICTORY VEGETABLE GARDEN

By W. ELBRIDGE FREEBORN.

IT SHOULD BE wise to keep before us the objectives that were agreed upon in Washington when the National Victory Garden program was launched on last December 20.

This is the program: "Home gardens are those on home or other home-controlled grounds, planted and cared for by members of the family, the products of which are primarily used for home consumption."

"An effort should be made to encourage every family controlling a fertile plot of land to produce at least part of the family's food supply, both for immediate use and for preservation for future use."

The objectives of home gardens are:

"1. To produce food for home consumption to the end that the food habits of the family may be improved from the standpoint of nutrition.

"2. To maintain the morale of the individual family and the public.

"3. To save family food expenditures.

"4. To conserve labor, materials and transportation facilities."

There is one human frailty that must be guarded against starting a vegetable garden now. It is a whole lot easier to start a garden in March than it is to hoe that same garden, come July.

simply because too many had been planted at one time.

A great many things may be planted at the present time out of doors. We believe that the following will be safe now: Beets, Brussels sprouts, cabbage, collards, carrots, cress, Swiss chard, kale, kohlrabi, lettuce, mustard, onion, parsley, parsnip, peas, garden or English peas, radish, rape, rutabaga, spinach, salsify and turnip. The latter part of the month corn may be planted safely, and as a matter of fact some of the more adventurous gardeners will plant some early corn now.

The proper preparation of the soil is very important and the work of next April, May, June and July can be made much easier if this preparation is carried on carefully and thoroughly.

Most of our soils in this area are fairly well filled with clay and the addition of humus will be of great value. Humus may be supplied by using stable manure, peatmoss, or woods earth.

One of the easiest and very best methods is to spread this material over the ground to a depth of from one to three inches and after that has been done thoroughly spade or plow the spot. If the ground is left after having been spaded several days—preferably until after a rain has come, this will give a chance for thorough soil aeration.

However, this is not absolutely necessary. The ground should be raked carefully, using a potato fork followed by raking with an ordinary garden rake.

This raking will accomplish two purposes. First, it will remove all rocks, sticks and roots. Second, it will smooth the soil down in such a way that the clods will be broken up, the ground leveled, and a good seed bed will then exist.

It is very difficult to keep rows straight, unless stakes and

What to Plant in March

FLOWER SEEDS: This is the last month for planting hardy annuals, such as bachelor buttons, California poppies, double poppies, larkspur. It's also the last minute for planting sweet peas. Try the new All-America spring-flowering sweet peas this year.

PERENNIAL PLANTS: All kinds of perennial plants may be transplanted now. Aquilegia, candytuft, Canterbury bells, hollyhocks, daisies, phlox, Thrift should be in every garden. Try Nierembergia coerules.

BULBS: It's a little early but canas, gladioli, dahlias and caladiums may be planted now.

ROSES: Last chance for roses to be planted.

SHRUBS: Last chance for shrubs to be planted—hurry!

strings are used in marking these rows off for planting the seeds. If this marking and planting is carefully done later cultivation will be easier and the garden will look much neater.

English peas is one of our favorite early vegetables and they really are grand when picked young and tender and cooked just a few minutes after they have come from the vines.

If you will choose three varieties, early, medium and late varieties, planting them at the same time, you will have a steady supply of English peas of from four to six weeks. Our suggestion of one of the better early varieties is Alaska Extra Early. For a good medium variety, our selection is Laxton's Progress. For a good late variety, our selection is Improved Telephone.

English peas have a deep rooting system and for that reason thorough, deep spading is particularly important. The seed should be covered about two inches and if you will space your rows about 12 inches apart, laying some brush between these rows, it will not be necessary to stake either the Alaska Extra Early or Laxton's Progress, but it will probably be best to stake the Improved Telephone variety, as it is a rather tall-growing sort.

The companion dish to English peas is, of course, Irish potatoes, and these must be planted as quickly as possible for a good, heavy crop this spring. Irish Cobbler is the main crop while Early Red Bliss is the early variety. Irish potatoes require a fertilization containing an unusually large amount of potash, and for that reason it might be wise to add about one teaspoon of complete garden fertilizer in fertilizing late potatoes.

Unfortunately, the potatoes we are planting with English peas will not mature in time to eat with English peas, except those you can, but they will both be good even though you don't eat them together.

Thousands Relieve Constipation, with Ease for Stomach, too

When constipation brings on discomfort after meals, stomach upset, bloating, dizziness, gas, coated tongue, and bad breath, your stomach is probably "crying the blues" because your bowels don't move. It calls for Laxative-Senna to pull the trigger on those lazy bowels, combined with Syrup Pepsin for perfect ease to your stomach in taking. For years, many Doctors have given Laxative-Senna in their prescriptions to make medicine more agreeable to a touchy stomach. So be sure your Laxative contains Syrup Pepsin. Insist on Dr. Caldwell's Laxative-Senna combined with Syrup Pepsin. See how wonderfully Laxative-Senna wakes up lazy nerves and muscles in your intestines to bring welcome relief from constipation. And the good old Syrup Pepsin makes this Laxative so comfortable and easy on your stomach. Even finicky children love the taste of this pleasant family Laxative. THE WAR WILL TEACH AMERICA TO SAVE

By CAROLYN MCKENZIE

BEFORE this world war is over, just about everybody in America will borrow one trait from another war—from our "enemies" of the Revolutionary days.

For we will go all the way through England, up into Scotland, to borrow the economical trait which typifies the clansmen of northern Britain.

We may be even more conservative than Scotsmen. We may even save envelope ends we so carelessly rip off when opening a letter.

The Atlanta Temporary Salvage Committee has plans for saving everything—papers, magazines, string, waste tooth paste and shaving cream tubes, old clothes, tinfoil and everything conceivable.

This group calls itself "temporary" because of the possible establishment of a similar organization, carrying national scope, through the Office of Emergency Management. Such a committee probably would be known as the Federal Bureau of Industrial Conservation.

But until such a group is organized, if it ever is, the Atlanta committee is begging housewives to save paper, save metals, save rags, save rubber, save glass.

SOME SUGGESTIONS ON HOW TO SAVE

There are numerous ways to save other than by ransacking the attic or the basement or piling newspapers and magazines in a stack after they have been read. These ideas are good, of course, but the alert Mrs. Atlanta will have ingenious schemes of her own.

For instance: When you go to market and know your list includes lettuce, celery, cabbage, carrots, turnips and such greenery, why not take along a market basket? It will fit into the floor of the car and save at least a half-dozen paper bags. By using this basket, the greens will have fresh air and will not be crushed by heavy cans or other weighty objects.

When you go shopping for safety pins and buttons and tiny odds and ends, an old-fashioned shopping bag would save yards of paper and you could buy the objects, then simply drop them into the one bag. If you are a member of the group which still thinks shopping bags are rather unattractive, why not take along the knitting bag? You probably will have it with you anyhow and you can put your small purchases in with your Red Cross sweater.

SAVING BAGS IN THE STORES

Another idea deals with department store buying. Suppose you purchase several items in one store. If the clerk does not suggest incorporating all in one bag, the buyer might. This will save paper. Or if you know the shopping list is extensive, why not ask for one large bag at the first stop and then add to it as you go along?

Paper should be kept clean and dry. Newspapers and wrapping paper should be piled into one stack, magazines in another. Knock down cartons and fold them into flat pieces. Crumpled paper is wanted, particularly high-grade letter and envelope paper and it should be tightly packed into cartons to avoid fire hazards.

Save metals—every bit of scrap iron, copper, brass, aluminum and lead. All pieces of iron, no matter how rusty, can be used. Keep large pieces of metal separate from small ones. Save soft collapsible toothpaste, shaving and cosmetic tubes, also bases of light bulbs. Do save tin cans; they are salvaged from your garbage. (These are directions from the Atlanta Temporary Salvage Committee.)

Save rags in a box or sack because all rags are important no matter how worn, dirty, shredded or torn. Wool, silk, nylon and rayon hosiery and underwear are important items. Save rubber for every piece which is in good, pliable condition is valuable. Save glass, white glass, broken or whole. It is needed in the manufacture of new glass.

The idea that junk has any value to the housewife is totally false, according to the committee, which is headed by Harley Lee Branch Jr., Devereaux McClatchey and Mrs. Leonard House.

You might take all the scraps in your home, junk them, and get less than one day's lunch money for the whole lot. But in mass, they are of value. Whereas you might realize 20 cents from everything you have collected for years, the Salvation Army or Goodwill Industries could take the lot of your garden club or bridge circle and make enough to buy an overcoat for a soldier.

Therefore, the committee is discouraging any private sales of salvage materials.

Give all your waste materials to aid in the national emergency, they plead, but be sure that these materials are put into the proper hands. For collection call WALnut 2035 or Goodwill Industries or the Salvation Army. Save tin foil and lead foil for the Red Cross or the Elks. Save clothes, furniture, tools, general equipment which can be reconditioned by local charities.

They also urge that you do not call the collector until you have a stack of newspapers or a large pile of other materials. Apartment dwellers and office managers should encourage janitors to salvage waste materials so that one collection trip can serve a whole building. Assist collections by having your donations easy to pack and carry.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION

ATLANTA, GA., SUNDAY, MARCH 8, 1942.

A KNITTING-NEEDLE BLITZKRIEG

By JAN ROBINSON SMITH.

IF YOU have ever visited the British War Relief in its little workshop on Peachtree street, you must have heard of Allene.

Allene Fielder Phelan has alone, if not single-handed, done more for Atlanta's share in British War Relief than Mr. Churchill would have seemed possible. In fact, when it comes to knitting, she is a one-woman blitzkrieg.

Just to astound the knitting public, here is a list of what she has accomplished since last July, 1941:

- 45 Pairs of Army socks.
- 34 Gloves.
- 8 Pairs of sea boots for Navy.
- 47 RAF and Navy helmets.
- 3 Cap mufflers.

From the scraps left over 11 pairs of children's socks.

Maybe I should not know how to knit or because this truly is a colossal feat for one knitter to perform, I cornered Mrs. Phelan in the British War Relief's Atlanta office and made her talk.

She says her interest in Britain began as early as 1915, when she met Harry Chisam, of Carlisle, England, at a dance at the Driving Club. This young British flyer trained in Canada and later in Augusta, Ga. He afterwards became a combat flyer in World War No. 1.

The Atlanta Constitution in 1915 carried a feature story about Lieutenant Chisam and Miss Fielder, with pictures of Harry Chisam in the plane he had named "Aileen" in honor of this Atlanta girl.

"Aileen" saw active service chasing Hun raiders and got plenty of little round patches on its wings to show where German bullets had landed "uncomfortably close" to the pilot.

But, to get back to World War No. 2, Allene explained that she had learned to knit the German method, adding quickly that the name had been changed to the continental method. The main difference in this method and the plain homespun variety seems to be "that you don't throw your thread." If you have ever watched innumerable knitters, throwing their threads, you can appreciate the speed gained by this continental method of elimination.

Small knitting is the most difficult, Allene told me, but it is so convenient to carry around. She says she knits everywhere, on buses, at bridge games and club meetings and she may even start knitting in church, after Easter, if the minister gives her permission.

Like all patriotic, sea-going knitters, Allene Fielder Phelan puts her name on all of her finished work. It might interest the sailors and soldiers in His Majesty's armed forces to know that the arm sea-boots or socks or steel blue helmets they are wearing (and which are shipped every Thursday from Atlanta's British War Relief office) were made by a lady quite as lovely to look at as she is efficient.

And 147 separate pieces of knitting since last July and still going strong, is a blitzkrieg in anybody's language.

Mrs. Aline Fielder Phelan is knitting each day for the British War Relief Society and in a way is repaying with duty in World War II, for honor received in World War I. At the left is Mrs. Phelan as she appeared last week at the headquarters. At the right is Harry Chisam, of Carlisle, England, standing beside his plane, "Aileen," which he named for the Atlantian whom he met during his training at Augusta for the English air force during World War I. He apologized for the bad spelling.

Miss Helen Aaron saves old stockings for the salvage committee.

Graves Where Dogs Rest

By RUTH STANTON COGILL.

At last... Atlanta has a Pet Cemetery... where canine and feline companions of yesterday may rest in peace and quiet... It is known as Pet Haven and located just off the Hollywood road near Bolton... Already the task of making Pet Haven the happiest "hunting ground" in the southeast is well under way... and it is the only pet cemetery in this section offering perpetual care... For some years, effort has been made by first one and another to provide Atlanta dogs with a final resting place but there were always injunctions... and other complications which curtailed the proper burial of a pet... No such threats face Pet Haven... It is licensed and zoned by the city... IF JUST A LITTLE YELLOW passes away... a single grave is by 36 inches may be secured for as low as $10... Larger breeds require more space, even in heaven, and suitable graves are priced accordingly... The price of sealed metal caskets begins at $6.50... While the cemetery has only been open a very short time, six little graves are on a hill... and soon there will be markers and possibly monuments at the head of each one.

ANIMAL CEMETERIES are not a new idea... They exist in or near many of the largest cities of the world... Boston, Mass., has two fine cemeteries for pets, in one of which are buried approximately 1,000 loved pets... Probably the most noted pet cemetery is in Paris... LaNacropole Zoologique... just outside the Champs-Élysées... There an imposing monument dedicated to Barry, the famous St. Bernard who had a record of saving 40 persons... The cemetery for animals in a corner of Hyde Park, London... was started in 1881 by the Duke of Cambridge... and even Queen Victoria had a cemetery on the Isle of Wight at Osborne for dogs and cats of the royal household... and marble headstones designate their graves... SO... when your pet passes away and you wish to give him a burial indication of the love you shared through his lifetime... Atlanta's pet cemetery is ready... WITH THE WORLD AT OUTS and people daily pointing to the horrors of war, saying civilization is on the wane... we figure the latter can't be so far when folks take the time, shoulder the responsibility and expense to see that their dogs are saved and protected... it's a fine old world after all... Evacuee animals to arrive in the United States from Hawaii recently numbered 32 dogs and cats... Names of boats and owners were withheld... but the San Francisco S. P. did an able job of sending the evacuees on to their destinations... A Dalmatian went to New Jersey... A bull terrier to Hollywood, Cal... A Dachshund traveled to Seattle, Wash... His crate bore a sign which read... "Call me Fritz, Give me fresh water... Aloha." Then an Irish setter and a Persian cat went to Indiana... A Llewellyn setter made the journey all the way back to Georgia... A Springer spaniel to Washington, D. C... and a lone little cocker went to Michigan... No doubt the terra firma felt mighty good to the weary group as they had spent nearly two weeks at sea in crates... mostly homemade... SEPTO PEDIGOE came by the first part of her name because she was the seventh puppy in a litter of cocker spaniels... Septo's owners, the John Pedigoes, of 37 Doyle street, Kirkwood, may have to employ an adding machine if they follow the Pedigoe family tradition and name Septo's numerous offspring numerically... for... recently Septo had a mother of 13 beautiful puppies... That's almost too many for two mothers and Septo was only one... which meant the loss of four puppies before the generous old stork, who'd never heard of curtailment and priorities... was hardly on his way... But there are still nine, which is something of a record, too... The five boys hearty... and completely lack and four girls are hale and in in manner, good or bad, when the faucets are passed around... CATTY DEPARTMENT... If your telephone jingles rather latish on a snow-clad night and a voice urges you to be on hand for a field trial at four the next morning... don't go... It will just be Harold McKenzie, of Peblebrook fame... throwing a snowball via Southern Bell...

The ARMADILLO IS INVADING GEORGIA

The odd ears and brow of an armadillo show the tough shell.

Three of a litter of four lined up for a race. To the right, foraging.

By F. WALLACE TABER.

IT LOOKED for all the world like a Walt Disney creation freshly escaped from the Sunday comics. The crowd of colored boys that had been giving chase circled us in panting awe as we lifted the fleet-footed curiosity by his tail and held him suspended in midair.

Suddenly he began to twirl. And, the faster he twirled the more the ever-growing crowd laughed, and the more they laughed the sillier we felt holding the queer little animal so all could see him. For fully three minutes and approximately 150 twirls it kept up, until our head swam from watching and our arm grew numb from exertion. Any minute the bulging-eyed little colored boys expected to see the tail unjoint and the animal scamper off leaving its tail spinning in my hand. Those in front were yelling for those in the rear to quit shoving, and those in the rear were yelling for those in the front to move out and let someone else see.

The animated juggernaut was an old friend of ours. We came from the Rio Grande valley and practically grew up with the armadillo. But here in Atlanta the armored anteater was an apparent newcomer, a total stranger from the looks of the crowd that blocked the Saturday afternoon shopping traffic. Horns honked, people yelled "get out of the way," and "what's coming off?" For a minute we wondered, too.

AN ARMADILLO IN A FOREIGN LAND

Finally all was solved when one of the more venturesome of the colored lads accepted custody of the now docile armadillo and we ducked out wondering why we had ever ducked in.

"It's just an armadillo a fur piece from home," we told the butcher, "and give us two pounds of shrimp."

"Ain't seen its like before," admitted the butcher. "Looked like a 'winnie dog' in a suit of mail... screwy contraption. Where do you suppose it came from?"

We supposed it came from Texas, least ways, its ancestors came from Texas. What it was doing here in Atlanta was another matter, probably an escaped pet, but possibly also the forerunner of a forthcoming invasion. We'd seen the same thing happen in Texas and again in Louisiana, and each time the first occurrence had been followed by others until armadillos had become an accepted part of the mammalian fauna.

It was only a few years ago that we saw our first armadillo making his way along a bayou in Louisiana. So strange was the animal that he was caught, put in an exhibition box and displayed at 10 cents a look. The enterprising captor made a nice profit while the novelty lasted. Soon, however, other armadillos turned up and the novelty soon gave way to commonplace. The same thing had happened in East Texas a few years before. Armadillos had progressively worked toward the east from their Rio Grande home and were everywhere becoming as common as native animals.

In his own country he is no more out of place than chuckling chachalacs, monkey-tailed coati-mundis and a host of other Latin.

A MINIATURE TANK AMONG THE MAMMALS

In Texas, Louisiana and Alabama, however, the armadillo presents a queer contrast with muskrats, raccoons, foxes and other orthodox fur-bearers.

For his body he has developed a suit of armor unprecedented in mammalian memoirs. From the tip of his elongated, insect-probing snout to the terminus of his multi-jointed tail he is right at home in this world gone armor-plating berserk. Even his legs are closely studded with horny plates and hinged with joints that would have shamed the peer of medieval Saracen armor smithies. Only his belly lacks the horny ornament and even this is covered with tough, leathery skin closely set with stiff pig-like bristles. All in all, the armadillo is like nothing short of a cartoonist's cavorting caricature.

In Texas prior to 1900 the armadillo was known only in the far reaches of the Rio Grande valley where an occasional migrant had successfully established himself after navigating the muddy river boundary. For many generations the dillies were content with their lackadaisical existence in the forested and wooded areas. Then one day came an armadillo Tojo to ripen the fruits of discontent among his peaceful playmates.

Almost overnight the move took place. Up from the Rio Grande valley, across desert, meadow, swamp and farm the armadillo vanguard spread on an ever-increasing front. Across rivers, through forests and along highways the fast multiplying migrants moved. The Neches, Colorado, Brazos and Navasota were river hurdles crossed as easily as the Rio Grande of old.

THEY SPREAD OUT LIKE FIFTH COLUMNISTS

Even the mighty state of Texas wasn't sufficient to satisfy the expanding whims of the armored soldiers. Ocean and stragglers ventured into New Mexico, Oklahoma and Arkansas, there attempting to establish outposts, embassies and legations. Even greater numbers moved across the Sabine and into Louisiana.

But, like most pioneering enterprises, hardships dogged the trail of the venturesome volunteers. On the farms the country curs chased them unmercifully and killed them whenever possible. Or the highways giant, thundering, rubber-tired demons knocked them off like duckpins in a bowling alley. In the towns the boys caught and sold them to tourists as curios from quaint old Texas. In the field and forest hunters shot them as potential enemies to such ground-nesting game birds as turkeys, prairie chickens and quail. In the branches and through the piney woods "Crackers" corralled them, boiled them with wheat shorts to feed the children, chickens, hounds and pigs. All in all the peaceful Rio Grande migrants found going a bit tough.

Nevertheless, the armadillo was a born warrior and had never learned defeat. In spite of the many odds, the battles were slowly but surely won—all save one. For the elements they were no match.

As would be expected in the semi-tropical south, the armadillo had never learned to hibernate. It had never been necessary for him to store up fat in order to pass winter curled up asleep inside a hollow log or subterranean burrow. Except for a slight chill in the air, winter was the same as summer, and feeding continued uninterrupted as a year-round schedule.

LEARNING TO HANDLE THE COLD WINTERS

Not so in the northern parts of Texas, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Here the majority of mammals had long ago learned the folly of fighting the long, cold winters. With the first blast from the arctic tundras, these furred beasts for the most part crawled into their dens, curled into balls of fur and peacefully slept through winter. Those that remained active throughout the long winter months took on extra heavy coats of fur and learned to sleep comfortably on empty stomachs, for it was not every day that brought food to the larder.

Into this strange, foreign world the modern army on the march advanced. Supply lines were the least of their worries, for food was everywhere plentiful, what with the rich agricultural lands a haven for their favorite tidbits—beetles, ants, grubs, flies, spiders, scorpions, worms, centipedes, caterpillars and infinitum. Yes, food was no problem. Neither was shelter. Any old creek bank provided protection for an easily excavated burrow, and, where banks were missing, the roof of you-poun, oak, gum, pine and even berry branches offered havens of retreat. Shelter was everywhere as abundant as food.

And so the pioneering armadillos set up housekeeping. At first they had difficulty with the "blue northerners," but after two or three years they learned to feed in the sheltered depressions and to emerge from their warm winter dens only during the heat of the day.

Then one day the air was filled with strange, fluffy-white flakes that fell to the earth and imparted their color to the trees, to the bushes and finally to the ground itself. Day after day the white flakes continued to fall and the ground slept under ever-increasing drifts of the powdery white stuff. Slowly the winter wore on and on, one of those snowy, bitter winters that come about every four or five years in the Panhandle belt. For weeks the snow remained, but the warmth of spring melted it and once again the earth showed through.

THE DILLO LOSES THE FIRST ROUND.

As the sun began to brighten the countryside with velvety carpets of green the small furred animals emerged one by one, stretched, yawned and looked about for something to eat. To their surprise they saw armadillos everywhere. Some were stretched out, some were curled up and some were still deep in their burrows. But no sign of life stirred their frozen limbs and in time the turkey buzzards and the black vultures circled, perched on dead trees and finally flapped to the ground to gorge on the now-thawed armadillo carcasses.

Yes, the periodical "white winter" had arrived and passed. And, with it went the entire population of immigrant armadillos. And so it has been ever since. For four or five years the armadillos manage to exist in the land to the north. Then comes a bitter, cold winter, and they are wiped out to the last straggler. Undaunted, the southern brothers move in to take their place and the cycle is repeated. The northern migration is definitely checked by a climatic barrier.

Fortunately, for the armadillo at least, the winters in Louisiana and eastern Texas were not so bleak. In fact, the first migrants to the bayous, branches and piney woods along the Sabine probably didn't even know that they were in a foreign country. Food and shelter was even more abundant than in their former home in the Rio Grande valley. Thus the vanguard of armadillos soon swelled into an army of occupation and finally into a conspicuous part of the mammalian fauna.

QUADRUPLET BIRTHS SWELL THE CENSUS.

Yearly their ranks continued to increase, for armadillos have quadruplets with the coming of each spring. Oddly enough these quadruplets are identical twins, if you follow through. Each litter is all of one sex and as much alike as peas in a pod, perhaps more so. No other animal can make that statement!

Nor, can any other animal claim part to such an amazing migration in such short order. Within a very few years the Rio Grande migrant had crossed the whole of Texas and Louisiana. Already stragglers are pushing across the Father of Waters, and scattered reports filter in from Mississippians who wonder what the curious creature is that digs in their garden. Without a doubt, time alone separates the armadillo from the sunny sands of Daytona Beach. Our encounter in Atlanta attests to that.

In Other Words--- Gene TUNNEY--- Tuck Your Chin In!

By DAMON RUNYON.

WE LOVE Lieutenant Commander Gene Tunney as a brother and respect him for his earnestness of purpose in his work as director of physical fitness for the Navy, so naturally we are deeply pained to hear him talking tripe.

He is quoted as saying, in boosting his physical fitness program, that it is important "because the average recruit of today's war is not in as good shape as the average for the last World War. Too much riding in cars, riding in elevators and smoking cigarettes."

We will wager the lieutenant commander a flagon of good old Kentucky bourbon that he cannot produce actual figures to prove what he says about the average recruit of today and of yesterday is accurate. Whether he is speaking only of Navy recruits or run-of-mill recruits for all branches of the service, they are essentially the same.

We are not talking about rejections because of physical shortcomings, though even rejections are not as high, proportionately, this time as they were in 1917. We are talking about recruits, meaning men who have been accepted. We fear the lieutenant commander's memory is very short if he has forgotten the thousands of anemic looking young gentlemen who straggled into the training camps in the other big war.

Many of the generation that made up our fighting forces in '17 were born of lush times and had lived soft. They came of an era of tall drinking and high feeding. The slums of the big cities had not been generally eradicated and the recreational and athletic advantages now convenient to youth almost everywhere were infrequent. Military training in schools and colleges was not largely practiced or very popular.

The kids certainly did more riding in cars then because more parents could afford cars than was the case when the generation that is now going to war was getting old enough to enjoy those vehicles—a generation whose teens were lived through the worst economic times in our history.

It is a generation that has known more actual privation than any that fought a war, this nation since its earliest days.

It is a generation that was denied the home luxuries that the other generation knew. We will agree with the lieutenant commander that it may have done too much riding in elevators but that indulgence came of the necessity of looking up guys in office buildings who might possibly be giving out jobs. And incidentally this generation had to commit itself to the interminable exercise of walking between elevators.

As for the cigaret smoking, a personal "bug" of the lieutenant commander's with which we will not quarrel, the truth of the matter is that the first AEF smoked more cigarettes in a week than the present Army does in a month and if this statement seems belied by the actual production figures, we must point out that the dimes make up the difference nowadays.

In short, we think the lieutenant commander is all wet in his comparison of the current recruits with those of '17 in the matter of physical fitness. However, we must admit that history quite confounds us on this entire proposition, because we learn that "Stonewall" Jackson's southern foot soldiers in the Civil War could outmarch as well as outfight any soldiers before or since their time and those guys never took any exercise whatever in preparation for their soldiering.

Nor can we find that Meade's men did any of that setting-up stuff in getting ready for Gettysburg—or coming around to the Navy—that Farragut enforced any calisthenics on his lads preparatory to Mobile bay, though we admit Farragut himself was quite an athlete. The lieutenant commander would no doubt have frowned severely on Grant's propensity for smoking cigars.

Physical fitness is a fine thing for soldiers and sailors, but as we have said before in this column we do not agree that any particular emphasis on athletic training, especially as supplementing the regular muscular exercises of the service, is necessary. Still, we will concede that even though we think it does no good it at least does no harm, which is more than we can say for some other ideas that are being applied to service men.

SLEEVES AND SKIRTS

Carry the New Details in Dresses

By WINIFRED WARE.

UPON skirts and sleeves, Fashion emptied her bag of feminine tricks this spring. Back after years of absence are such eye-catching embellishments as lacy ruffles, petticoats peeping from beneath draped skirts, and certain variations of the "peg-top" skirt which was the alluring mode of pre-World War No. 1.

The dresses pictured on this page are good illustrations of what's new in dress details. Upper left: This is a two-piece dress in black crepe. The skirt is slim with slight flare from gores. The bodice is fitted, well nipped in at the waist. The collar is a rolled tuxedo. Sleeves are the main point of interest; three-quarter length, they are finished with deep lace, set very full, and extending at a notch, back to the elbow. The same lace is used on each side of the bodice front to simulate pockets. $29.98 is the price of this one.

Upper right: The short bolero which looks as trim as a man's tuxedo and a variation of the peg-top skirt are details of importance here. This dress is navy blue crepe. The crisp white vest is part of the dress and is made of fine pique, the same being used for the wide cuffs on the bolero. Large emerald buttons close the vest front and the cuffs. The long torso bodice ends in a yoked treatment at the hips. Slight skirt fullness is placed at each side front, giving the neg-top effect. This dress is priced at $29.95.

Lower left: This is the "petticoat" dress. From beneath the skirt hem draped to a point in center front peeps a crisp white gathered petticoat made of eyelet embroidery. To be utterly truthful, I must admit that it isn't really a whole petticoat but material set in to look like one. However, this could be removed and a swishing taffeta petticoat could show there. Side saddle drapery is placed at left side just below the hip. The bodice is simply fitted, with wide lapels extending from the V neck. These are emphasized by a ruffling of the same eyelet embroidery that makes the petticoat. This dress is $39.98.

Right, below: Two tiers of knife pleats make the skirt of this navy silk print. The bodice is the popular long torso, with shoulders emphasized by navy grosgrain ribbon. This ribbon is placed, too, at the top of each skirt tier. Small bowknots in white are scattered over a navy background to form the print. This dress is $22.98.

Above: A two-piece dress in black crepe gains distinction from wide lace fully gathered onto three-quarter sleeves and on bodice front. Miss Gertrude Benning is the model.

Above: Fullness set below a hip yoke, gives a variation of the "peg top" skirt which was popular just before the last war. This dress, in navy crepe, also has a tuxedo-like bolero. Miss Nell Cheek is model.

The clothes and accessories shown on this page can all be found in Atlanta stores. Call Winifred Ware at Walnut 6565 to find out where they can be bought, or write her in care of The Constitution.

The "petticoat" skirt is featured here; deep ruffled eyelet embroidery making the petticoat and the flattering collar. Sheer black crepe is the fabric. Miss Benning is the model.

New Book News

By JOHN E. DREWRY.

Dean, Henry W. Grady School of Journalism, University of Georgia.

Latest among the authoritative commentaries on the war is "Ramparts of the Pacific" (Doubleday, Doran) by Hallett Abend, a New York Times correspondent who returned to this country less than a month before the war began. This book is based upon interviews with key persons and inspection of defenses in Hawaii, the Philippines, Singapore, Malaya, China, the Dutch East Indies, Australia and New Zealand.

Another war item which is being pushed as the best of its kind is "Moscow War Diary" (Knopf) by Alexander Werth, who has been Moscow correspondent for the London Sunday Times and Reuters since the outbreak of the Russo-German war. This book is essentially a series of day-to-day observations on Russia at war, set down on the spot. Some of the original entries have been expanded so that their significance may be better understood, and also including chapters on the future of Russo-British-American relations is considered.

"Moscow War Diary" has special significance because it is the first eyewitness account of the Russo-German war, and also because its author has such an excellent background for a book of this kind. Half-English, half-Russian in blood, Mr. Werth was born in St. Petersburg in 1891 and spent his youth there. Son of an engineer, he accompanied his father on many trips and saw much of Czarist Russia at first hand. In 1917, his family returned to Britain and young Mr. Werth completed his education at the University of Glasgow. He has specialized in economics, by birth, language, travel, education and newspaper experience, therefore, he is in a unique position to interpret the Russo-German war to the western world.

A recent contribution to Georgian which merits more attention than it has yet received is "Sidney Lanier: Poet and Prosodist" (University of Georgia Press, by Richard Webb and Edwin R. Coulson.

The volume consists of two essays and an interpretative preface by Dr. Garland Grever of the University of Southern California. The first essay, by Mr. Webb, is said to be the earliest attempt to give a reasoned and rounded analysis of Lanier's work. Written in 1903, this paper, which won the Porter prize at Yale University, is described by Dr. Grever as "the absolute pioneer" in its field. The second essay, by Dr. Coulson, is an appraisal of Lanier's reputation and influence. "The two studies, when juxtaposed, make a valuable combination and a piquant contrast," writes Dr. Grever. "One embodies the first comprehensive effort of criticism to determine Lanier's validity as poet and prosodic theorist. The other summarizes the evidence of the entire recent period as to the place he has attained and the force he has constituted. It is a pleasure to assist in the launching of such a book."

"War-time is traditionally the time for musical comedies and the 1941-42 season has run true to season." So reported Life magazine in a recent issue in which several pages were devoted to the current Broadway offerings. The magazine might also have made reference to the success of vaudeville, both across the footlights and over the air. All of which gives special interest to the new printing of Douglas Gilbert's "American Vaudeville: Its Life and Times" (Whitely House) and may indicate that the amusement industry is not so dead as he seemed to feel when he first wrote what is both a delightful history of an important phase of entertainment and a nostalgic memorial to an era not so long gone.

Vaudeville, writes this author, "was America in motion, the nation's relaxation. To the Palace, the Colonial, the Alhambra, the Orpheum, the Keith circuit, and chain variety houses, N. Y. to L. A., we flocked, vicariously to don the false face, let down our back hair, and forget. Vaudeville was the theater of the people, its brassy assurance a dig in the nation's ribs, its simplicity as naive as a circus. The two-day variety show all of us knew and many of us loved was a complete characterization of a pleasantly glib, clowning America, physically bestirring itself, sunnily sophisticated, its social implications, reflected in the response of its audiences, are pronounced because its entertainment was largely typical fun. The trestle of its humor was the march of those times. Thus, vaudeville is an important chapter, not only of the stage, but of Americana."

Mr. Gilbert notes recent efforts to revive vaudeville, and comments in particular upon the efforts of Messrs. O'Connell and Johnson whose "Sons O' Fun" is a current Broadway success, just as its predecessor, "Hellzapoppin'", now on the road, was. As for the decline which vaudeville suffered following the close of the New York Palace in 1932, the reasons, in the opinion of Mr. Gilbert, are many and involved. The movies, of course, played a part. So did differences and difficulties among vaudeville executives. Most important of all, however, were the acts themselves, which, according to this author, lost their appeal when they tried to become high-brow.

The author of "American Vaudeville" is a former drama critic of the New York World Telegram. In preparation of this book he spent years interviewing the great and once-great, thumbing the pages of old magazines and theater programs, and digging through the dusty files of newspapers. Slow and laborious though the research was, his narrative has the raciness, rhythm and humor of vaudeville itself.

A Woman's Problem

ELLEN SPRING, by Elizabeth Marion. Thomas Y. Crowell Company, New York. 328 pp. $2.50.

The house was old and beaten shabby by years of weather and neglect. But to Ellen Spring, who had a spirit, it had been battered by a heartless mother and a vicious husband, the place was a refuge and a chance to start again. The silence and the solitude would be a balm, she was sure, for the hurt caused by humiliation and soul-shabbiness.

She had brought her son with her out to this old house, which had been part of the inheritance from her miserly father. Together they made over the place and became a part of the countryside. Rufe's city-bred cynicism melted before friendliness and naturalness of tractor operators and farmers. Ellen came to respect herself anew and forget the slime of her New York life after she had made friends with Noah, who still kept coming to see her even after his work on her house was done. And with Tony Lester, who was removed a little from dissension and carping unhappiness in his home. And above all, with Willie Hollan, who thought that he could never again feel clean in his soul, and happy. The house, the sun, the golden hills and these new people who had accepted her, strengthened Ellen for the day when she would again have to face Maurice, her husband. But love and kindness and peace have a way of eradicating the horror of the worst of days—or nights—and Ellen Spring, on the day she accepted this truth, found herself again.

The Great Outdoors

ROAD OF A NATURALIST, by Donald Gifford Peattie. Houghton Mifflin Co., Boston, Mass. 335 pp. $3.00.

Mr. Peattie paints pictures of the "great outdoors" that are technically perfect but that do not seem alive. There seems to be the same flaw in execution that there is in the performance of an excellent pianist who has mastered the intricacies of the instrument and who is technically a craftsman, but who lacks the ability to give the music the spark of life.

"Road of a Naturalist" is graphic but by no means an inspired work. The various natural scenes are woven into a background of autobiography the progress of which is never permitted to be strong enough to really hold the attention.

It is to be presumed that this work adds still further to the stature of Mr. Peattie as a phrase-fancier. Yet those of us who read and those of us who write know that there are phrases and phrases. Phrases concerning nature which lead gracefully and harmoniously into successive phrases, are pleasing, buoyant and worth while. But Mr. Peattie's phrases, though trenchant, seem strings of isolated phenomena. On reading many of them one has the feeling that Mr. Peattie has set down many of his thoughts more with an eye on the "Picturehouse Speech" column in Reader's Digest than with a thought of having them fit the context of the book.

Southern ODDITIES

CLINT BONNER

In sections of New Orleans it has long been the custom to bury the dead above the ground. In Alabama there is a grave in which a man is buried standing up—because of his own request after he had become so tired of lying flat on his back. On the other extreme there is another Alabamian who is reputedly buried on his bed—because he "loved the rest so well"—so when he died they carried bed and all to the cemetery and built an encasement around it—above ground.

Throughout the south there are many strange grave. Wilmington, N. C., seems to claim the strangest of all—the burial of a young lady sitting in a chair and perfectly preserved in a container of rum. But there was a logical reason for this burial. Early in 1857 Wilmington's Mr. Silas Martin allowed his son and daughter to accompany him on an extended sea voyage. During this voyage the daughter died.

In a storm the brother was washed overboard. The voyage was continued and when the heartbroken father reached port the daughter had been dead six months. No attempt was made to remove the body and the cask was buried intact. So, if the liquid has not evaporated in this more than three-quarters of a century, the body of Nancy Martin remains perfectly preserved in this strange grave which may be seen today at Wilmington, N. C.

Do you know any oddities in your community? The author will appreciate your suggestions. Address them to Southern Oddities, care The Constitution.

Reminiscences.

TAMARA, by Irina Skariatina; Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis. 394 pp. $2.50.

Countess Irina Keller-Skariatina, who is well remembered for her former books about Russia, has just published a novel in which the autobiographical element is too obvious to be concealed with any degree of success.

The charm of Irina Vladimirovna, the authoress, permeates the pages of "Tamara" with the subtlety of a rare and lingering perfume and one detects a faint nostalgic note in her vividly written scenes of the old Russia that vanished with the revolution.

About 15 years after Napoleon's retreat from Moscow, Princess Tamara's paternal great-grandfather, Prince Yakov, had married the beautiful but untutored Gypsy Dominica. This gave the family additional spice, and while the two older children showed little trace of this Roman strain—except in their high spirits—Tamara, in appearance and fiery temperament, was unmistakably a throw-back to the colorful and unruly Dominica.

Before her escape from Russia, Tamara had lived a life that was a mixture of happiness and tragedy. However, up to the time of her marriage to the handsome wastrel, Prince Alexei, she knew very little pain and her life was well-sheltered from the vicissitudes known to the Russian masses.

Her second marriage to a scion of an old Russian family turned out to be a miserable fiasco. Describing these tragic events of her life, the author displays much restraint and there is hardly a trace of personal bitterness and self-pity. She possesses a rare sense of balance and perspective, which makes the book all the more enjoyable.

Each character in her novel is drawn with consummate artistic skill and the events of the turbulent days of the Revolution unfold before the reader's eyes with lush realism and panoramic breadth.

JOSEPH A. LOEWINSOHN.

Solid Biography.

CORDELL HULL, by Harold B. Hinton. With a Foreword by Sumner Welles. Doubleday, Garden City, New York. 377 pp. $3.00.

The great Tennessean has been rather shabbily treated by contemporary biographers. Possibly the reason is that most biographers think this candid and forthright personality lacking in the indefinable something called "color"—a dubious premise when it is recalled that, with the possible exception of his august chief, the Honorable Cordell Hull is the greatest vote-getter at Uncle Samuel's disposal.

His actions are not often dramatic, but the man is. His public speeches—though he is said to deliver them in a painfully unemotional way—frequently have been. And they stand up exceedingly well in the light of later events—possibly better than those of any other current holder of public office. It seems to me that the biographer has not done this quality of Mr. Hull's full justice. Also it seems to me that in minimizing the importance of the London economic conference and the famous Hull-Moley controversy that lent to the spring of 1933 a certain Mother Goose flavor, he is doing his subject scant service. There is more to this than meets the eye. There is more to the great Tennessean than met Major Hinton's eye. This is a good, solid, but rather flat-footed biography.

Way of Transgressor.

THE DEFENSE RESTS, by Eleanor Pierson. Howell-Soskin Co., New York. 229 pp. $2.

Lila Donnelly, daughter of the late senator, wealthy and distinctly modern, confessed to having killed George Adams, man-about-town, when he got too fresh. She was defended and cleared by John Hadley, who had been her father's attorney. Hadley's wife gave a party to celebrate her acquittal, at the close of which the beautiful Lila was found murdered. From that time on until the mystery was cleared all Washington was wrought up over her death; that of Flo Davis, the city newspaperwoman, and finally the strange disappearance of Attorney John Hadley.

PRINCESS PAUL SAPIEHA.
Author of "Beyond This Shore."

Life in Poland.

BEYOND THIS SHORE, by Princess Paul Sapieha. J. B. Lippincott Company, Philadelphia. 348 pp. $2.50.

This author's "Polish Profile," a description of life in Poland immediately before the Nazi invasion, won a well-deserved success two years ago. This time she repeats, in fiction, the same theme, but there is a profound and surprising difference. Technically it is almost perfect. Its motivation and characterization are excellent; its description good. That is to say, it is filled with real people who do real things for reasons which can be understood and appreciated.

Now most years bookstores are filled to overflowing with works of fiction that contain racy and charming dialogue without stint or measure—and practically nothing else. This one contains everything but that. Its conversations are banal beyond words, are awkward and stilted and are just as apt as not to come to a full stop for no discoverable reason. These are beginners' faults; they are not serious, since they are easily overcome. But it is surprising to find such a consummate artist as the author of "Polish Profile" subject to the faults of beginners.

Splendid Western

RUKUS AT ROARING GAP, by Amos Moore. Ives Washburn, Inc., New York. 292 pp. $2.00.

"Smiling Jim" Lorimer and his magnificent chestnut stallion, Windy Day, stop at the little town of Roaring Gap, known far and wide for its lawlessness.

Four horsemen accost him and the leader of the group, Beef Weller, tries to dicker for his mount. When Jim refuses to sell Windy Day, Weller announces loudly that it is a stolen horse, and belongs to the Long Diamond Ranch, for which he works. He shouts for someone to call the sheriff, and Jim sees the furtive movements of the other men, who are slowly surrounding him.

Just as the sheriff rides up, a burst of gunfire roars out. When the smoke clears, "Smiling Jim" is standing calmly with a gun in each hand, and the Long Diamond men are highlighting it. Reluctantly, Jim rides away. Not far from the town he passes a shabby ranchhouse from which comes a girl's piercing scream. Jim dashes to the rescue and finds a young boy and his sister being tormented by a couple of tough bullies. Jim's rescue of the boy and girl, and his decision, to stay in Roaring Gap and wrest control of the town from the organized Long Diamond desperados, make a blood-tingling tale that reaches a new high for Amos Moore.

Naive Humor

MY WAR WITH THE UNITED STATES, by Ludwig Bemelmans. Modern Library, Random House, New York. 151 pp. 95 cents.

Ludwig Bemelmans came to the United States in 1914 from Austria when he was 16. Soon thereafter he joined the U. S. Army. This is a reprint of his diary, written while he served in various army camps and later translated from the German into English. It is not hilariously funny, as most war diaries try to be, but it is full of a naive humor which will prompt many a chuckle from the reader. Illustrations by the author are an interesting sidelight on the early career of the now famous cartoonist and humorist.

Thus We Have U. S. Dynasty Of Vanderbilt

COMMODORE VANDERBILT, by Wheaton J. Lane. Alfred A. Knopf, Inc., New York. 369 pp. $3.75.

Wheaton J. Lane's "Commodore Vanderbilt" is announced by its publisher as the "first modern biography of Cornelius Vanderbilt."

The commodore is the apogee of "rugged individualism." It was he, delightful soul, who flatly refused to give anything to charity because he said the line at his office would be so long, did he once start this giving, that he would need the police to reach the door. He did need the police once or twice, at that.

Dr. Lane reports the foregoing as a minor incident, which indicates the trend of his biography. This is toward the business activities of the old man, rather than the personal idiosyncrasies. Those old steamship deals; the more than merely smelly deals with the government in the War Between the States; the battles with Drew and his cronies; the corner in Harlem Railroad stock; the gradual way in which circumstance forced the old man to form the New York Central; the Nicaragua canal business—all these events are described once more. Perhaps Dr. Lane has been a little more kind than most biographers have been, and certainly his final judgment is unusual. He thinks the old man was better than he has been painted.

Yet the new book has a good deal of the other, and equally familiar, material. The commodore was taken up with spiritualism toward the end, and used to call up the shade of Jim Fisk for advice on occasion. The spirits led him into financing Victoria Woodhull and Tennie C. Claflin, and Dr. Lane believes there was nothing naughty there. But Vanderbilt believed also in magnetic healing, whatever that may have been, and thought that certain locks of hair had magic properties. These and other curious ideas Dr. Lane explains quite simply: the commodore was an ignorant man, whatever that may have been, and thought that certain locks of hair had magic properties. These and other curious ideas Dr. Lane explains quite simply: the commodore was an ignorant man, whatever that may have been, and thought that certain locks of hair had magic properties. Economic Plan.
ECONOMIC HANDBOOK FOR LABOR AND LIMITED CREDIT PLAN, by John L. Swentzel. Meador Publishing Company, Boston. 94 pp. $1.

Swentzel has a plan, but I cannot regard it as a permanent cure. Basically he proposes that an arrangement be made for the government to lend to citizens on a limited basis on the theory that if those who are unemployed are able to purchase at a price equal to an adequate average living scale, prosperity and private employment will increase and the money can easily be repaid.

There are two flaws in this plan. First, this would make the federal government the largest loan enterprise in the country. This, likely, would not be so bad if it were not for the fact that the government is already in virtual control of the real estate business. The loan business on top of real estate would put the government too thickly into the general private business of the country.

The second and more objectionable flaw is the fact that the plan would effect no permanent cure. For a while employment would increase and the initial loans might be paid off. But large enterprise in this country would rapidly increase its mechanical facilities to the point that the increase in employment would be only temporary.

Spring Surrenders to Snow

FROSTY FASHIONS—Piedmont Park was zipped into one of Stylist Winter's most becoming creations Monday—a Flake White ensemble with Bark Brown accents, tailored to a tee. Snow styles accordingly came to the fore, and sales of galoshes and such, sheep-like, soared. The fad presented for several days and threatened to become more than merely a fly-by-night whimsey. Kenneth Rogers' camera recorded the novelty, at which we may chuckle, come spring!

SNOW SCULPTORS—Deanna Slappey (left), Mrs. J. L. Slappey and Clem Wesson made the most of the return of winter. The children had almost as much fun as their moms. Photograph by H. J. Slayton.

STORMY SENTINEL—At the Induction Center at Fort McPherson, Photographer Marion Johnson found this snow-traced warning to new recruits, manned by Private R. L. Sosebee. (Warm welcome, what?).

SWING SONG—March inspired no spring lyrics, the second day of its arrival hereabouts. And a lonely swing at Piedmont Park, its chains clanking in the wind, offered only shivery refuge for a "young man's fancy." (Photograph by H. J. Slayton).

(Right) SNOW - TENT CITY—This community of army wigwams, known as Tent City, is the last place that recruits live before being shipped away from Fort McPherson.

Beauty and defense. Betty Ann Lilly, whose father, an ATO, is a colonel fighting with MacArthur, gets her crown of defense bonds and stamps from Bill Seay, Tech ROTC officer, at the opening function of the ATO conclave, the Tech chapter's formal dance at the Piedmont Driving Club. Crown bearer is little Tori Lilly.

Stewart Daniels, of Champagne, Ill., veteran executive secretary of ATO, had a word with the Rev. J. Milton Richardson, retiring president of the Atlanta Alumni Association, and Judge Sheppard Bryan, former worthy high chancellor, seated, and R. A. Edmondson, Jr., worthy grand scribe, and John Vann, member of the High Council, standing, at the annual banquet, held at the Biltmore hotel. Atlantans always have ranked high in the councils of the fraternity.

Conclave in Atlanta

Founded just after the War Between the States to re-cement the bonds of north and south, Alpha Tau Omega fraternity last week held its province conclave in Atlanta to study the role of the fraternity in wartime. To Mayor LeCraw, of Atlanta, and to many active members of the fraternity the meeting was a prelude to military service. Fun there was, but underlying the fun was the grim business of war. The couple above symbolizes the meeting.

Photographs by Bill Wilson.

One of the most important activities of the fraternity has been its vocational board, founded by Atlanta's Mayor Roy LeCraw. Here LeCraw sits in on a forum with R. S. Hammond, right, present director of the work in the southeast, while Bill Thompson, of Emory; Tifton Greer, of the University of Georgia, and Bob Emerson, of the University of the South, participate. Listening in are Hinton Longino, chief of Province I, and Albert A. Wilbur, of Chicago, worthy grand chief (standing, left to right).

The big moment. Initiate Max Brewer, of the University of Florida, receives his badge from Worthy Grand Chief Wilbur. Center is Melvin B. Smith, president of the Florida chapter. The presentation was the climax of a model initiation held during the conclave at the Biltmore.

An Old-Fashioned Idea

Yes it is indeed an old-fashioned idea that glasses mar one's appearance. Fear eye-sight need no longer hamper your daily tasks when you have properly fitted glasses . . . glasses that are styled to suit you and compliment your appearance.

At Home with the Curtains Drawn

In Georgia now—curtains are being drawn symbolically, if not realistically—most evenings are quiet gatherings of friends.

To win a war . . . men need inspiration . . . hope . . . courage. For courage is a spark kindled in the hearts of men battling for all they cherish . . . mirrored memories of the Home they love.

It takes courage, too, to smile in the face of danger—but lightness of heart and beauty of the Home are today—as always—woman's greatest contribution to the spirit of her country at war.

On our floors are fine pieces of furniture—samples and floor models—all marked very low to meet with the new war budgets. Make your Home beautiful at very low cost.

Atlanta Blacks Out

BEFORE—A few minutes before Atlanta's observance of its first official blackout, Kenneth Rogers' camera recorded the city's skyscrapers, hallowed by an unco-operative moon. Broad street is the brightly lighted thoroughfare which meets a deadend at Peachtree street.

AND AFTER—The fact that the moon remained brightly ignorant of Atlanta's blackout, made possible this silhouette of her downtown section, snapped after the alarm. Looking north on Broad street, it is a duplicate of the picture above—without benefit of electric lights.

NOW YOU SEE IT—A five-second exposure, just short of the blackout, gives us this view of Peachtree at the intersection of Forsyth and Pryor streets. Note the parked streetcar; there it stayed until the "all clear." Photograph by Staff Photographer Bill Wilson.

NOW YOU DON'T—A minute was given this negative by Bill Wilson in order to capture the skyline of the picture above. Dumbo and Mister V did a quick and complete fadeout.

PRE-BLACKOUT SPOTLIGHTING—Picking out the U. S. Army planes overhead, a few minutes before the "alert," firemen manned the huge searchlights on the Spring street viaduct. Photograph by Bill Mason.

A SERIES OF INVESTIGATIONS LEADS THE MAN OF STEEL TO THE HOME OF TOM PHELPS, HIRELING OF THE IMAGE. THERE, HE LEARNS THAT THE SCENE OF THE MASTER CRIMINAL'S NEXT CRIME WILL BE THE RUNYAN GALLERIES. AFTER SUPERMAN DEPARTS, TOM PHELPS HAS ANOTHER VISITOR...

THE IMAGE!

I HEARD EVERYTHING. HERE'S WHERE YOU LEARN IT'S FATAL TO DOUBLE-CROSS THE IMAGE!

DRASTICALLY PHELPS SEEKS TO DASH FROM THE ROOM, BUT THE IMAGE CONFUSES HIM BY CAUSING A DOZEN REFLECTIONS OF THE DOOR TO APPEAR...

I - I CAN'T FIND THE RIGHT ONE!

I'VE TONED WITH YOU LONG ENOUGH! NOW YOU DIE!

HANDS - HANDS... DOZENS OF THEM!!

ON HIS CONFUSED RETREAT BEFORE THE MENACING HANDS PHELPS DOES NOT REALIZE HE IS NEAR THE OPEN WINDOW. SUDDENLY HIS FIGURE PITCHES OUT...

YA-AAAA!!

AND SO DIES A TRAITOR! BUT NOW FOR THE RUNYAN GALLERIES JOB! ONCE AGAIN THE IMAGE WILL PROVE TO SUPERMAN THAT HE HAS MET HIS MATCH!

RETURNING TO THE DAILY PLANET, SUPERMAN CHANGES BACK TO HIS IDENTITY AS THE MEEK REPORTER...

ER-HOW'S CHANCES FOR A DATE TONIGHT, LOIS?

SORRY, CLARK... BUT I WON'T BE ABLE TO GO. THE CHIEF HAS GIVEN ME A DULL ASSIGNMENT TO COVER... THE EXHIBIT AT THE RUNYAN GALLERIES.

("SHE MUSTN'T GO! THE IMAGE IS GOING TO STRIKE AT THE RUNYAN GALLERIES TONIGHT!")

I DON'T WANT YOU TO HAVE A BORING EVENING, LOIS-SO... IF IT'S ALL RIGHT WITH YOU, I'LL TAKE OVER THAT ASSIGNMENT.

("CLARK'S SOLICITUDE IS SUSPICIOUS. PERHAPS THERE'S MORE TO THIS ASSIGNMENT THAN I EXPECT!")

NO, CLARK I WOULDN'T DREAM OF SHIRKING MY DUTY.

THAT EVENING... AS LOIS ADMIRES SOME OF THE VALUABLE GEMS DISPLAYED AT THE GALLERIES...

YOU!

SURELY I CAN APPRECIATE THE BETTER THINGS IN LIFE, TOO. AND BESIDES, IT GIVES ME AN EXCUSE TO BE WITH YOU.

UNEXPECTEDLY, THE IMAGE STRIKES! A DOZEN REFLECTIONS OF HIM SPRING INTO BEING LEAPING AT ONE OF THE DISPLAYS. HE SMASHES THE CASE AND ANNEXES THE VALUABLE GEMS, WHILE GALLERY GUARDS FLAIL HELPLESSLY AT THE REFLECTIONS...

WHAT? I CAN'T TOUCH HIM!!

BUT YOU'RE WELCOME TO TRY!

COME BACK, LOIS!

I'M GOING TO STOP HIM!

I'VE GOT HIM! I'VE GOT HIM!

WRONG, YOUNG LADY! I'VE GOT YOU! WE'RE LEAVING HERE TOGETHER-AND IF ANYONE TRIES TO STOP US, YOU DIE!

("THIS CALLS FOR A SWITCH TO SUPERMAN!")

OFF DRIVES THE IMAGE WITH THE CAPTIVE LOIS, BUT UNKNOWN TO HIM, THE MAN OF TOMORROW TRAILS THE CAR FROM A POSITION HIGH IN THE SKY...

HE'LL HAVE TO STOP THE CAR SOMETIME! AND WHEN HE DOES, I'LL BE READY!

AS NUMALI LEVELED HIS RIFLE AT TARZAN, TAAMA SPRANG AT HIM. THE GUN FIRED HARMLESSLY.

NUMALI, FEARING HE COULDN'T RELOAD IN TIME, PICKED UP THE GIRL AND MOUNTED HER SPEEDY HORSE.

TOWARD DAGGA RAMBA'S CAMP HE GALLOPED, WITH TARZAN'S TROOP IN SWIFT PURSUIT.

WHEN HE REALIZED HIS HORSE WAS SLOWED BY THE DOUBLE BURDEN, HE FLUNG TAAMA TO THE GROUND.

AS TARZAN SCOOPED HER UP----

A SHOT RANG OUT. THE TREACHEROUS NUMALI PITCHED OFF INTO THE SAND----DEAD.

TAAMA CALLED HER HORSE. AS SHE MOUNTED TARZAN SAID STERNLY: "YOU WILL RETURN TO THE CITY."

WITHOUT A REPLY, THE GIRL TURNED HOMEWARD, WHILE THE TROOP WHEELED AND RODE AWAY.

LISTEN, RED, I'M TAKING YOU INTO MY CONFIDENCE BECAUSE YOU SEEM TO HAVE SOME BRAINS! DON'T LET ME DOWN!

WELL, THANKS MR. RYAN!

THE ENEMY PATROL HELD SANDHURST AS A HOSTAGE... I HATE TO SAY SO — BUT I THINK IT'S BECAUSE SOMETHING IN HIS PAPERS TIPPED THEM OFF THAT HE IS FRIENDLY TO THE AXIS!... THE BROWNIES HAVE VERY FEW MEN TO GUARD US — SO THEY HOLD SANDHURST AT NIGHT, BUT ALLOW HIM TO MINGLE WITH US DURING THE DAY...

I LET HIM HEAR ME TALKING OF TRYING TO GET AWAY FOR HELP — BECAUSE I THINK HE'LL BLAB TO THE GUARDS... IN RETURN FOR FAVORS RENDERED... BUT EVEN THOUGH HIS TREASON PROTECTS HIS WIFE AND CHILD — I'VE GOT TO SHOW HIM UP AS A SPY — TO PROTECT US WHEN WE TRY A REAL BREAK!... NOW, HERE'S WHAT I WANT YOU TO DO...

TIME TO GO FOR WATER! ...REMEMBER, YOUR LIEUTENANT SAID IT WAS OKAY!... DON'T YOU GET IT?... GURGLE, GURGLE! ADAM'S ALE! SPLASH! GUNGA DIN! DON'T YOU DIG ME, DRIP?

SO! GET WATER!

IT'S LIKE IN THE MOVIES — HE'S STIR CRAZY!

THAT'S THE COMMOTION TO DIVERT THE GUARD — NOW RYAN WILL RUN FOR IT FROM THE WELL!

BUT NOT FAR! MEN WAIT AT WATER EDGE!

SHOOTING AT THE WATERFRONT! ...THAT MEANS THEY'VE GOT RYAN!... I'D BETTER NOT SHOW MY FACE OUTSIDE!

GUARD AT PRISON HUT RAN DOWN HILL TO CUT RETREAT OF FUGITIVE! I GO TO COVER HIS POST — SO NO OTHERS ATTEMPT ESCAPE!

ALL WE CAN GIVE . . .

In money . . . in work . . . in doing without: It will take ALL we can give to win this war

by Robert Keith Leavitt

THERE was a news dispatch in the papers a few weeks ago. It was only a little item about a farmer in up-state New York, and it was buried in the back pages among the human-interest sidelights in this war. It wasn't even a very unusual story. In dozens — perhaps hundreds — of towns the same thing must have happened.

But for what it symbolizes, that story rates a lot of hard thinking, right here and now.

In the town of Norwich, New York, a man named Sam Schou, a prosperous dairy farmer, with a wife and two kids, heard the news of Pearl Harbor; he went out and sold his entire herd of 49 Ayrshire cows, sold his hay, his machinery, his equipment, his furniture. He sent the children to the neighbors; his wife went to work for the Red Cross. And Sam Schou dusted off his hands and headed for the nearest recruiting station.

It made a nice little story, comforting — on the face of it — to less impulsive citizens like you and me. We could murmur "Attaboy!" and reflect, as we turned to the crop prices or market reports or sports pages, that it is a good thing Uncle Sam has some fighting fools to end the war quick before our lives get too disarranged with taxes and scarcities and uncertainties.

WE'D have done a lot better to cut out that article, paste it in our hats, go for a long walk and then reread it and think hard about this "fighting fool."

Because, in reality, it may be you who are being the fool — not Farmer Schou.

There are some significant points in the later lines of the story:

Schou was born a Dane, came to America as a boy. Such people, being maybe a little closer to what has happened abroad, do not undervalue the freedom of the United States.

HE WAS a well-informed man: graduate of the University of Minnesota, scientific farmer, leader in agricultural improvement, well-read in world affairs. He had a clear idea of what we are up against.

And — he was a veteran of the American 2nd Division, in which he had enlisted in 1918. Old soldiers are nobody's fools about war.

Sam Schou — like many, but still not enough, Americans — knew instantly what we are all going to know sooner or later. And the sooner the better:

It is a desperate war. There is no possible halfway about it. We are on a side which, so far, has never secured more than a teetering position of equality in the fight. We went in only half-prepared. We are up against fanatical peoples committed — every last one of them — to our destruction. They can count on their citizens giving every scrap they own and every breath they take to knock us out.

We can lose this war — and the surest way to lose it is to think and act as though we could not lose. We should know that from Pearl Harbor.

We can lose it — and if we do, we lose everything we have or hope to get: Ayrshire cows and well-paid jobs, savings and careers, universities and security in old age. Those are among the things that Europe has lost to the Axis. The smartest man at "getting his" — or keeping it — while his country is at war will have nothing left, not even liberty and self-respect, if the nation loses.

But we can win. We can win this war so overwhelmingly and decisively that our Ayrshires and universities and liberties will be safe so long as the memory of man endures. We have got the stuff to pin back Axis ears for keeps.

But the only way we can win is to understand now — and not in some desperate later fix — that nothing matters but winning. Literally nothing: not property or prospects or position or anything we counted on before.

WE HAVE got to write off every material thing — mentally, at least — and to reach that stage of exaltation where there is all to gain and nothing to lose. The British, bombed from hell to breakfast, have achieved greatness in adversity. The invaded Russians have. And the Chinese, and the Dutch . . . Are we any less men than they, either as a nation or as individuals? Are we bright enough to see in their fiery rebirth an imperative example for ourselves?

We can't all shed everything as literally as Sam Schou. But spiritually we can clear the decks and dust off our hands for the one job above all others. This is no time to think about possessions or plans. If those things come through with us, well and good. But the important thing is for us to come through as Americans. It is time to stop thinking about what we have and begin remembering who we are.

SIDELINES

PATRIOT. Norwegians are becoming more optimistic. They feel the day of Nazi defeat is coming closer. Evidence is the news that many are glad to be arrested just to prove they were on the right side when the day of reckoning comes. Even the children of Bergen share that feeling.

Recently they were ordered to attend a Hitler youth exhibition. Instead of entering the hall, they marched past the door, singing their national anthem, yelling "Long live the King!" Every one of them was arrested except a little six-year-old. Chagrined, he ran up to a policeman, shouted:

"Long live the King! I want to be arrested, too!"

INDEX. One thing about this war: it seems to make people talk a lot. Look at the record of the phone company:

An average of 85 million calls a day were made in 1941 — 6 million more each day than in '40. Long-distance calls increased 15 per cent. Total: more than a billion during the year.

Clearer index to defense and war production's effect on talking are the Washington figures. Calls to the capital in '41 were 50 per cent more a day than in '40. Now, as we really swing into action, Washington calls are already 70 per cent above last year's.

SIMPATICO. Groundwork for the recent Pan-American alliance was laid as far back as 1933, the year of the Montevideo Conference. Cordell Hull traveled to South America, found many of our southern neighbors suspicious and hostile.

Promptly, with no fanfare or formality, Mr. Hull started calling on the delegates. Some he found at lunch. Others were in conferences. One he visited in his bath. To all, he said he had come just to get acquainted, to talk over common problems, to learn how they might be helpful to each other. By the end of the Conference, some of our most bitter foes were making speeches in defense of the U. S.

And so, because a simple, modest gentleman had shown himself a true good neighbor, the foundation was laid for one of history's most important alliances. M.

IT WAS a night when a northeaster blustered across the sand dunes of Cape Cod, and the trees leaned and the sea ran white and wild under a thin moon. Brad Hewitt was having lobster in a Provincetown cafe when the belted shore-patrol sailor entered. The wind came in with him. Brad heard the wind and saw the man's face, and he knew something was wrong.

There were eight or ten other naval officers at the tables, all wearing civilian clothes, like Brad. But the sailor came straight to him after one quick look around.

"Are you the captain of the Chickadee, sir?" he asked.

Brad thought, half-angrily: I must even look like a tugboat! And, after a fashion, he did. He was solid and slow, deliberating each word and action, and he was dependable. Tugboats are like that. And for ten years, before being called into active service as a lieutenant in the Naval Reserve, Brad Hewitt had been closely associated with tugs, in the salvage business.

He put down his fork slowly. "I'm executive officer on the Chickadee, and acting captain while the skipper's on leave. Why?"

The sailor saluted. "You're wanted aboard, sir. It's that old Eighty-Two boat — she dived and didn't come up!"

"Eighty-Two boat?" Brad echoed. That meant the S-82 was on the bottom, under that wild sea. It meant Whit Rand was down there in her, waiting for the Chickadee to come out and try to save him. Whit Rand — of all the lieutenants in the regular Navy — of all the people in the world!

When Brad thought of Whitney Rand, the stored-up bitterness of ten years rose and choked him and demanded revenge. He thought of the Naval Academy. And Elinor Sherrill...

HER face was a remembered dream, framed by hair too soft to stay put, hair like a mist of gold. She had storm-blue eyes and slim legs, and every moment with her was ecstasy. She was vividly alive, electric and emotional and unpredictable — everything so different from slow, solid things.

That was what she had said that night ten years before, when summer lay soft along the Severn. She had said, "Brad, darling, don't be angry with me — but I've changed my mind. It wouldn't do; it just wouldn't! Darling, we're just so different —"

Brad had never been angry with her. He knew, later, that the real difference was the difference between the Navy's blue and gold, and civilian clothes. He wasn't being graduated, that tough year when only the top half of the class got commissions in the line. He was Brad Hewitt — "anchor man" of the class. He had plugged slowly and doggedly for four years, avoiding being bilged — and remembering everything he'd learned, because he'd learned it the hard way.

And then he'd been put on the report. Frapped by a midshipman lieutenant to whom everything came easy, who was among the first ten in the class. Whitney Rand.

That had bilged Brad out; they were tough that year, and it took only a few demerits to do it. So he'd packed, and said goodbye to Elinor Sherrill... And when she said she had changed her mind, he knew Whit Rand had won, and that they'd marry as soon as Whit's two years of Navy-enforced bachelorhood were up...

Brad followed the sailor outside. The wind slammed him, and sand stung his cheek. He turned down to the dock, where the dark waters rumbled and slapped to show what it was like outside the harbor. More imaginative men might have looked into the water to see other things — a huddle of strained faces in the thickening air of the forward

His right arm was in a sling, and it was pain that made his eyes so bright torpedo room, or women twisting their handkerchiefs as they waited tensely beside radios from Maine to California. Or a bugler blowing taps while the Secretary dropped a wreath into the silent, penitent sea...

But Brad could only be haunted by things past and gone, because whatever impressed itself in his mind remained forever. And he was already making his plans. He functioned that way — give him a stated problem, and time, and he would arrive, slowly but surely, at a solution. Which was why he had been successful in the big salvage firm on the Great Lakes and on the west coast. There are few swift decisions necessary in salvage work. It is a slow, painstaking, painful job. You need to plan it all out in advance. You must know the wind's vagaries, and what the sea might do.

Men from the Chickadee's liberty party were already gathering at the Navy landing. Jeffries, the gunner's mate and master diver, saluted and drawled, "Evenin', sir." He was lean and leathery, and afraid of nothing in the green ocean. He sang Navy and hillbilly songs on the bottom in a diving rig.

BRAD HEWITT asked, "Anybody know how deep she is?"

"All we know is she didn't come in, sir. She's somewhere in Area Roger."

Brad moved into the lee of the dockhouse, under a light, to wait for the boat. A car came down the pier — fast. It was whizzing toward the far end, where there was room to turn around, but it stopped with a squeal of tires in front of the dockhouse.

"Brad! Brad Hewitt!"

Things like that require a little time to make their impact upon your mind. They are unexpected, a part of the confusion attendant upon any swiftly-striking, tragic event. They have to be taken up out of the tangle and examined separately before you can plan how to handle them. A car drives up, and the girl you used to love — the girl you'll always love — comes running to you across the years, calling your name...

Brad said, inately: "Elinor! You're here!" She had been crying. He had never seen her cry. Mascara streaked her cheeks, and her nose looked a little red, and she wore more lipstick than he remembered. But she was still slim, still lovely.

"I just arrived — this — afternoon." Her voice broke. "Oh, Brad! This happened while — while I was home — getting a divorce!"

Her face was against his shoulder. He felt sobs shake her. He thought, with sudden clarity and a surge of hope that was as wild as the sea: Getting a divorce! Then he thrust that thought aside.

"Don't worry, Elinor! We've got a rescue chamber on the Chickadee — my ship. We'll get them up, all right!"

Elinor said, as if very tired: "I knew it was coming some day. I think that must have been why we — why I went home. He was gone all the time when he was on a battleship. He was gone, and I had nothing to do. Nothing. But submarines!" The word was a shudder. She lifted her wet storm-blue eyes and whispered: "Brad, I know now that I made a mistake — that time you asked me. I know I was thinking of uniforms and bands and Army and Navy games and dances at the Officers' Club. It isn't like that. It's —"

The shore patrol officer put his head into the door. "Your boat is here, sir," he said. "The squadron commander wishes you to make the flagship and pick him up."

Elinor said, "I can't stand it, Brad! I can't stand this, either!"

She was going to pieces. Brad shook her back together.

"I tell you I'll get him out!" he cried savagely. And to himself, with a fierce joy: And I'll punch his face for him! For what he did to me that time, I'll go down to the bottom of the sea and punch his pretty face!

THE sun was up. Wind had blown all the clouds out of the sky, and Area Roger, in dim sight of the Cape, was an expanse of sea tumbling over itself in a hurry to go everywhere and nowhere. Brad Hewitt stood in the

That worried crease between his brows meant he didn't like the looks of the sea — and had no great confidence in the abilities of a reserve officer. Brad thought, with hot resentment, But I'm in command of this ship! and steamed the Chickadee slowly past the buoy with a grapnel dragging.

It caught, and they left another buoy to mark the descending line for a diver's use. The signalman who had gone in the whaleboat waved his flags. They had removed the brass plate succinctly stamped: "Submarine Sunk Here. Telephone Inside." They had talked to the old Eighty-Two boat.

She was on the bottom at nearly three hundred feet, her after part flooded because of the failure of a main induction valve. There were no casualties. But air was getting bad, would last only a few hours more.

Captain Libby perspired despite the cold. He wiped his brow, and said, "Then they'd better use the Momsen lungs and come up a line! We'll never be able to put the chamber over in a sea like this. It would smash our side."

Brad Hewitt walked deliberately through the pilot house to the other wing. He stationed a quartermaster on the pelorus there to take bearings, and came back to do the same on the starboard side. Then he planted his feet wide against the roll of the ship and faced the four-striper.

"We can plant a four-point mooring. The gear is rigged. If they use the Momsen lungs, it means flooding the rest of the boat, and you've got that much less buoyancy when time comes to raise her. At that depth it means a lot of pressure, and a long-time ascent for each man in this cold water. Some of them might lose their heads and let go. That would kill them. And pneumonia might kill the rest!"

Captain Libby's face went red. He said, "Damn it, I know all that, Hewitt! But —"

"And, damn it, Captain, I know salvage!"

The four-striper choked. But, looking at the solid man, he began liking what he saw.

"I can moor her as steady as a rock," Brad the course was as plainly defined as a city block.

There were four deck anchors Brad had had secured outboard on the fantail — two on a side — rigged so that the stroke of an axe would send them over the side one by one. The chain of each was faked over the bulwarks so it would pay out. And from each chain a stout steel cable led to one of the corresponding four huge wooden spuds secured in metal sleeves in the rigging.

BRAD had taken soundings around the entire course. He knew how much cable each anchor and spud would need. Now they were heading up on the first leg of the rectangle. The tenseness was something to feel. Captain Libby puffed noisily on an unlighted pipe. "Cast off!"

The axe swung, aft, and the after port anchor splashed. Chain rumbled and whipped, spraying rust particles over dungaree-clad men. In the rigging, a bluejacket with a sheath knife cut away the spud buoy at the instant the anchor was taking up slack in the cable.

The Chickadee went straight ahead, and the war-colored spud bobbed off her port quarter and fell astern.

Three hundred yards to the next corner — the tenseness again, and the cry: "Cast off!"

Brad Hewitt jockeyed the Chickadee alongside the telephone buoy. He stopped the engines. Steam winches clattered as the slack was taken up on this hawser and paid out on that one.

Slowly, deliberately, the Chickadee trussed herself into steadiness. The pitch and roll ceased. Captain Libby grunted, "Damn nice work." Nobody heard him. Brad Hewitt was in the wing with a megaphone, ordering the diving stage swung outboard, with Jeffries in his suit.

Brad was thinking, Jeffries is the man who plays the hero — Jeffries does the dangerous job! A tugboat skipper was like his boat. Workaday and dull. And he was thinking, in the grip of a cold anger that had lasted ten years, I'll knock Whit's teeth in, down there in that pigboat where nobody can see. Let him report that!

But it was curious enough when he tried to analyze the way he felt toward Elinor — the way he felt now, when she planned to be free, and when she had admitted that marrying Whit Rand was a mistake. It was curious, and it would take time to understand.

Jeffries went down the descending line that would guide him to the deck of the Eighty-Two boat. He had the downhaul cable of the rescue chamber secured to his arm by a bit of line. While he was down there, attaching the shackle of the cable to the submarine's escape hatch, he whistled and shrieked and groaned. The unearthly noises blasted from the loud speaker on the fantail, and Jeffries sang things like:

*"Oh, the Chickadee is just a joke —
We fill the ocean full of smoke,
But at seven knots along we poke
In the working tugboat Nav-ee!"*

He was calling for them to hoist him so soon that no decompression time was needed. Brad Hewitt had the diving rig peeled from the lean gunner's mate at once, while the big rescue chamber was being swung outboard by the boom.

Jeffries now took over the job of operating the chamber, with another sailor to assist him. But Brad himself manned the telephone on deck.

Under Brad's direction, Jeffries closed the chamber's lower hatch, blew his main ballast tank, and flooded the chamber's lower compartment. He started the compressed-air motor, and the reel began winding the downhaul cable, began pulling the buoyant chamber down into the sea.

"Slowly — slowly!" Brad ordered. "Take your time!"

On deck, the minutes dragged. Twenty — twenty-five — and then the chamber was on the hatch.

"Flood your main ballast!" Brad said. "Blow the lower compartment." He could hear the hissing of the compressed air through the phone.

He said, "Vent the lower compartment," and knew that the vacuum thus created was pulling the nine tons of steel down against the submarine with a seal that was airtight and watertight.

It took only a little while then to open the starboard wing of the Chickadee's bridge, listening to wind and sea, and hearing Elinor's sobs.

He needed a shave. And sleep. He had been up all night, planning this operation, working feverishly to rig the gear back on the fantail. The nine-ton steel rescue chamber stood near like a big gray top.

"Smoke bomb off the port bow, sir!"

A little later they sighted the Eighty-Two boat's telephone buoy, a yellow dot on the heaving green water. Brad ordered a self-bailing motor whaleboat lowered, and a drag prepared. Captain Libby, the submarine squadron commander, came to the bridge.

He was a nervous man with iron-gray hair.

went on. "I'm not a battleship sailor. I've worked on the sea, on dirty, thankless, slow jobs. I'm a tugboat man, and —"

He stopped, surprised at himself. He was almost proud of being a tugboat man!

Captain Libby's jaw snapped shut. Then he said, "Very well! You're in temporary command. Proceed!"

IT TOOK time. You had to plan everything. Cruise around the buoys on a rectangular course, taking bearings on the Provincetown monument, on the lighthouse, on a signal tower, on a battleship anchored in the harbor. Study wind and tide on each of the four legs. Mark the bearings down on the chart until

Two down. A turn. Down the other leg, planting the starboard anchors with geometrical precision that left the telephone buoy in the center of the rectangle.

Now the Chickadee cruised slowly up that center with two more motor whaleboats in the water. Each boat dragged a six-inch manila hawser; the sea caught at the heavy lines and bent bights in them. But the boats went on obliquely from the ship, running the lines out through the fantail bits, and rocking alongside the two spuds until their crews had the hawsers secured. Then the process was repeated on the other spuds, with hawsers paid out through the forward bits.

chambers' lower hatch, secure the holding-down rods—and open the escape hatch of the old Eighty-Two boat. And after eight men had been taken into the chamber, the processes were reversed. Twenty minutes—thirty—and the eight were looking on sunlight, and feeling wind on their faces. Rand would wait, Brad knew, until the last trip of the chamber to leave his submarine. Brad turned to Captain Libby and brushed his hand across his red-lidded eyes. The job was nearly done, and he had begun to feel a weariness. But there was still his own job to do.

He said, "Captain, if you don't mind taking over, I'd like to go down on the last descent."

BRAD could think, in that steel drum, with his back against a circular wall that grew colder and colder as the depth increased. He could watch the small eye ports, and see the water turn from a translucent green to blackness; he could listen to the little compressed-air motor making a noise like a distant riveting hammer.

And all the time he thought of Elinor, and of Whit Rand. He had envied Whit at the Academy—his ease of grasping the things for which Brad himself had struggled so hard—his good looks, and his tall, commanding presence. Brad had envied Whit these past few weeks, after coming to the Chickadee and hearing that Whit was commanding the Eighty-Two boat. Reserve officers, like himself, seldom got a command. If they did, it wouldn't be a combat ship, like a submarine. It'd be something like a tugboat—a squat, unlovely, hard-working tug...

There was a cushioned jar. The rescue chamber was on the hatch, and Jeffries had shut off the motor and was flooding main ballast. When he blew the water out of the lower compartment, Brad could look down through the floor plate and see the Eighty-Two boat's escape hatch, with the downhaul cable shackled to it and running up through a fair-lead into the chamber.

It gave him a peculiar feeling. There were still men down there. Seven of them, who had depended on the Chickadee—and on Brad Hewitt, and Jeffries, and all the rest of the Chickadee's dungareed crew—for their lives. Seven men, including Whit.

Whit Rand. He was going down the escape hatch and into Whit's submarine. And when the six members of the crew had come up into the chamber, Brad was going to say: "Just a minute, Whit!" He'd see the surprise come into Whit's face, and he'd say: "Remember when you frapped me at the Academy, Whit? It was nothing to you. But it bilged me! I might have been a submarine skipper today, if you hadn't been so duty-struck—"

You planned out things like that, what you were going to say, and what you were going to do. You planned them out of the stored-up bitterness of the years. Out of the years Whit Rand had been married to Elinor, making her unhappy.

And just when Jeffries' assistant was opening the hatch of the Eighty-Two boat, you were trying to analyze that unhappiness. It seemed to be based on the Navy. On Whit's job she wanted bands and parades and uniforms, like she'd seen at the Academy. She wanted dances at the Officers' Club, bridge teas, and none of the long and lonely hours while a ship was at sea, doing its work.

You thought, suddenly, Why, she isn't being fair to Whit!...

The lights were dim in the forward torpedo room, and the air was bad. There was a vague, impatient stir of men who had been waiting a long time for this last trip. Brad stepped from the last rung of the ladder that was so steep a man had to back down it, and felt water up over his ankle. Somebody said, very quietly: "All right, men. Up you go."

It was Whit Rand's voice. Brad looked around, trying to see him, trying to adjust his eyes to the faintness of failing bulbs. A chief petty officer said, "But you, Captain—we're not going up until we've helped you up the hatch! You—"

"That'll do, Smith," Whit Rand said. "It's an order!"

Smith said, "Aye, aye, sir!" and began climbing. Brad moved a few paces into the dimness. Whit Rand's voice said, "Well—I'll be damned! Brad Hewitt—old Anchor Man, himself! Excuse the left hand, Brad. My starboard wing's out of commission."

He was coming through a passageway. His right arm was in a sling made of a sailor's neckerchief, and it was pain that made his eyes so bright. But he smiled, the same old handsome smile, and when he turned to shake hands, stood tall and erect.

"The water was coming in so fast, back aft," he said almost apologetically. "We had to dog the doors pretty quick, and get some men out of the engine room. I slipped and fell, and broke my arm. Brad, I'd be glad to see the devil himself down here, but I'm mighty glad to see you—and with that gold on your sleeve. Reserve, eh?"

All the things Brad had planned to say and do were slipping away. And the bitterness, with them. He understood, now. Whit Rand was a naval officer, and always had been. He'd put Brad on the report, that time, but it was his duty to do it.

Brad laughed to cover up his confusion and slowness. He said, "Yeah—reserve. I'm just a tugboat man, Whit. I'll always be a tugboat man, I guess."

You said that instead of the things you'd planned to say. You knew, now, that you never really could have said them, and you never could have hit Whit in the mouth, either. You looked at him and knew that some day he'd stand tall on a flag bridge, wearing a broad stripe and making quick decisions that would never be wrong. You were proud to have been his classmate.

And proud, too, to have been a tugboat man. Because Whit was saying, "Captain Libby told us over the phone about that four-point mooring. Brad, that's seamanship! Captain Libby says it was the damndest exhibition of real seamanship he's seen in thirty years. Well—I'm proud it was you who did it! Up the ladder with you, Anchor Man. I want to leave last, and I want to leave under my own steam—"

Brad had time to think things out in the half hour it took for the ascent. He knew, now, that he could think about Elinor forever after, without any of the old hurting. Tonight he'd get her aside and tell her a couple of things.

There was still a salvage job to be done. It would take some one who was different—so different—from either Elinor or Whit, to do it.

Then he changed his mind

"The Noblest Act I Witnessed in the War" — eighth in a series by famous authors and war correspondents

AT LAST, our ship came in. She was not much to look at. She was scratched and grimy and about her there was the smell of old ships, that curious odor compounded of innumerable coats of paint and thousands of cargoes.

But to us she was the most beautiful thing in the world. It did not matter if she was filthy as a street urchin and slow as a turtle; she was beautiful nevertheless, because she was going to take us from Europe to America.

This was in Lisbon, after the Nazis had torn up France. The loss of my home and belongings, the shattering of my whole way of life was a very minor casualty in the debacle. But, if only because of the terrible suddenness with which it had come upon us, it left me with a sense of unreality, as if I were living in a bad dream. Lisbon increased that nightmare quality. The atmosphere reflected the bewilderment and fear of the thousands of refugees who had crowded into the city. We lived on rumors, and one after another the rumors proved to be false. A ship would be sailing tomorrow. No, not tomorrow, but next week. Next week — next week — the week after next —

One morning the rumors came true, and the ship was there.

They let us on board. I doubt if there has ever been a stranger assortment of passengers, a cross section of the nations of Europe, piled together by catastrophe. There were not many signs of high spirits, not even among the children — too much had happened, and most of these people had husbands, sons, daughters lost somewhere behind.

By and by, with the ship still lying alongside the dock, we heard another rumor. There had been a mistake somewhere; the ship could not transport all those who had come aboard. A hundred had to be cleared out, and even then the old hull would be crammed to the limit. This, of all the rumors, was the one that should have been false; but it was not.

I do not remember what method was used by the authorities to determine which of us must stay behind. Except that, as these things must always be in times of emergency, it was a swift, mechanical and therefore ruthless method. Those who could stay on the ship were given tags of white paper to identify them; the others had to return to land and wait for another ship — if another ship ever came. It must have sounded like a death sentence to many.

It fell on a little group that happened to be near where my wife and I stood. I believe they were Dutch, father and mother and a boy and girl of ten or twelve. Very respectable, their clothes tidy and clean by some miracle — or by habit, I should say — after the inferno they must have come through. You might have called them stolid, for that is what the Dutch are supposed to be, and indeed they can take a good deal of kicking around and still stand firm. It is the southern Europeans who are generally regarded as the emotional ones. And perhaps if this family had come from one of the southern countries, there would have been tears and wringing of hands now when it was known that the father must get off the ship, left only with the hope that he might rejoin his family later.

It might have been a good thing if they had relieved what was inside them by letting it out. But they suppressed it. They could not "make a scene." Looking at them, you would not have known that these were their last few minutes together. Up the deck, officers were coming slowly along, shepherding before them all who did not have the little white tags.

None of this happened easily and quickly, in a series of clear pictures. You must imagine the confusion all around us, the babble of voices, people pushing back and forth, a child crying somewhere. I saw and understood it only in glimpses. I saw the Dutch father saying something to his wife and patting his boy on the shoulder. The next thing I noticed, someone had interrupted him. It was a nondescript-looking fellow, thin, gray, a man you would have passed without a second glance. I gathered that the father could not understand him. Then there was a quick movement, and he was left looking at the white tag in his hand and the other man was walking away.

He passed me. I said, in French, "Did you give it to him?"

He shrugged. "Well, what would I be doing in America?" Then he pushed on toward the gangplank back to Europe.

I made some inquiries later, after the ship had sailed, but nobody knew much about him. Someone thought that he was an Austrian anti-Nazi refugee. If so, it must have cost him many sacrifices to come to Lisbon, and the ship must have meant more to him, even, than to most of us.

There will be many richly deserved medals given in this war by each of our United Nations to their own heroes. But in this war of all wars there should be another form of decoration to commemorate such acts, so that they will be remembered by us all — as this one will be remembered by one little Dutch family now in America.

Spies have mapped all America, are still among us, listening in while we talk. But we can lick them. Here's how

by B. Edwin Sackett

Former FBI Special Agent

THERE is one painful truth about Pearl Harbor that we must remember.

That is the manifest fact that when those enemy bombers swooped down from the skies, their pilots knew the exact location of every strategic objective on the island.

Maps in their cockpits—painstakingly prepared months before in Tokio—pointed the way accurately to hangars and storage facilities of Hickam Field; to soldiers' barracks, gasoline dumps, ship anchorages and ground fortifications. Low-flying fighters knew exactly which roads to strafe to prevent the defenders from reaching their posts or taking the air against them. Pearl Harbor held no secrets for the invader!

Sadly enough, this same fact was true of the Philippines; is true of Alaska, and the Canal Zone. It is true, also, of every vital defense point in the continental United States.

For years Japan has been building up this fund of strategic information with little hindrance from us. Its "fishing fleets," commanded by disguised naval officers, have taken harbor soundings and have studied our coast defenses, our dock facilities, our ship movements along the entire Pacific coast.

Japanese "students" at American universities were actually military officers—and spent their holidays photographing the charming views afforded by our bridges, our water-supply systems and our dams.

Japanese naval and aeronautical engineers attended our finest technical schools and visited every near-by aircraft factory and important industrial plant.

Japanese army officers were even permitted three to nine months of training at our Army posts.

And always supplementing this direct research by military men were the reports of hundreds of commercial representatives of Mitsui & Company and the other huge business concerns of Japan and of so-called Japanese tourists.

For years the general staffs of the world's armies have been tirelessly engaged in "spotting" military objectives in possible enemy countries. Those efforts were not limited to trying to ferret out secrets of new guns and bombsights, warships and planes. It is just as vital to know the location of water supplies, communication and transportation networks, airports, gasoline storage points, naval bases and warehouses.

In the Axis countries, even in peacetime, every effort was made to keep foreigners from getting such information. The secret police scrupulously watched movements of foreigners, searched their baggage, tapped their telephones. Picture-taking was flatly forbidden. Two American aviators who inadvertently flew over restricted territory in Japan were clapped in jail for months.

In America, however, we all but organized tours for these grinning espionage agents—and indignantly slapped down any law-enforcement officer who interfered with their "rights" to go where they pleased and photograph anything that caught their fancy. Great hydroelectric projects like Boulder Dam, Grand Coulee and Bonneville, for example, have been widely advertised tourist attractions for years: Come one, come all, and bring your cameras.

No Secrets

WE PUBLISHED lists of defense plants, with the contracts awarded them, so that anybody could map the exact location and importance of each cog in the "Arsenal of Democracy." As late as last summer a railroad company published a free map showing every military camp in the country, with precise directions for reaching them. It was so good that an Army intelligence officer posted one in his office. "It's much better than anything the Army has put out," he told me.

Scores of these Nipponese photographers were picked up by the FBI for questioning. But with American laws as they were, we had to release them with apologies. Even though every G-man in the country knew exactly where those pictures were going—and why!

The realization that our enemies know the location of every strategic spot in America may be stunning. But at least we know the bad news at the very beginning and can provide against it. And unless I am sadly mistaken, America's response will not be one of dismay, but, rather, a defiant rolling-up of the sleeves.

Part of that response will be a wave of alertness among the thousands of men who guard our dams and reservoirs, our power plants and railroad terminals, our bridges and tunnels.

TW-3-8-42

They no longer wonder, as they patrol their cold and lonely posts, whether their hardship serves any good purpose. They know the importance of their jobs. And so does the general public.

We must not forget that the ENEMY WITHIN is a graver threat than the enemy without.

Anybody who remembers the devastation of the Black Tom explosion in the last war knows the menace of saboteurs. And those who aren't yet awake to this danger may be interested in a recent report from a New England defense plant:

A foreman, washing up to go home, chanced to glance up at the ceiling. What he saw made him start a tour of the factory. He discovered seven places where the electric light wires had been deftly short-circuited, so that when the current was turned on they would set fire to the plant.

That tampering had been done by the plant electrician himself, who had been in the company's employ seven years — but who was also a loyal Bund member!

Feeling the Mapmakers

THE enemy within doesn't have to seize the French fleet or capture Atlantic island bases or invade Alaska in order to strike. He's already here. And with him he has complete maps of every vital spot in America.

Quick alterations made since the declaration of war have in some cases nullified those Tokio maps. A bridge or waterworks obviously can't be moved overnight. But in our military establishments it is standard practice to change things periodically — or to set up alterations which automatically go into effect as soon as war starts. And such alterations are effective.

Remember the doggedness of the Japanese fliers in bombing the daylight out of a naval tanker in Pearl Harbor — because it was moored where their maps said an aircraft carrier should be?

Our cue from that is this: Keep your mouth shut about any military, naval or industrial information which comes your way — especially major changes in location, methods or schedules. That's a lesson the British learned early in the game. They discovered quickly that "the very walls have ears" — and that not only strangers, but even friends, may be channels of information for the enemy.

As a consequence, the British have learned to trust no one. And without resorting to Gestapo tactics, they have imposed a voluntary "code of silence" upon themselves which does honor to free men.

When the Queen Elizabeth sailed from Clyde, for example, Captain Duncan Cameron, her skipper, merely said to his housekeeper, "Don't prepare supper for me; I won't be back for some time."

And although some 500 dockyard workers and a large crew knew when the ship was sailing and where, not a whisper of it leaked out until she landed safely in New York.

Likewise, thousands of Britons in the port of debarkation knew of the arrival of the first Canadian contingent, but they staunchly kept it a secret until Mr. Churchill announced it some time later. Indeed, the Prime Minister's meeting with President Roosevelt somewhere on the Atlantic — and his recent visit to Washington — were both known to hundreds of civilians, sailors and government employees and newspapermen, here and abroad. But they resolutely kept their mouths shut.

In view of the enemy's extensive knowledge of fixed and permanent defense facts, that's exactly the spirit we need now. Tearing a price-less page from the British book, here are some of their self-imposed rules which we must follow:

If you're an industrial worker, don't give out information about your work, your plant's production, where orders are shipped — or anything else the enemy might like to know.

If you're in the armed forces, don't talk about movements or transfers, training or equipment. Only the other night an elderly man sat next to a soldier at a show and, during intermission, asked him how he liked it.

"Swell," said the soldier. "And it's the last I'll see for some time. I'm sailing tomorrow on an Army transport."

With enemy submarines reported off Long Island, what a stupid thing that was to tell, especially to a stranger!

If you have a relative or friend in the service, don't pass on any military information which he may have written home. The mere fact that he tells it to you doesn't mean that it should be broadcast.

If you're a civilian, not identified with the industrial or military setup, you can still serve your country by keeping to yourself information you may get. Byron Price, Director of the Office of Censorship, recently said: "The security of our armed forces, and even of our homes and our liberties, will be weakened in greater or less degree by every disclosure of information which will help the enemy."

So keep your mouth shut. And, by the same token, keep your ears and eyes open.

IT'S LIKE I said to Sammy Steers: when your country is up against danger, you get to thinking of the things and the people you can count on. That led to our speaking of Anne Warren.

I remember I stopped at the schoolhouse that morning on the way down to help fight the fire. I remember how the kids arrived talking and laughing a bit too loudly to show they weren't scared. The smoke was getting thick even then. When Timothy Lutz drove in with the school bus, he was short quite a few of his usual passengers. Their parents wouldn't let them come. Afraid the wind might change. Everybody said it would be bad if the wind changed. He'd picked up the teacher, of course, at Smith's Mills, as usual. When I saw her face I knew what it meant for her to keep school today.

"Well, Anne," I said. "Any news?" And she shook her head. "Keep smiling," I told her. What can you say, anyhow? I guess she hadn't slept a wink since the Doc was missing. Everybody said it was madness for him to try and get through, but there was a baby coming up at Ronsell's, five miles through the bush, and he'd promised Eva Ronsell... well, you know how it is. They figured from the way they found his car, blackened and ruined, that he'd had to abandon it and head back for Smith's Mills. Can you blame Anne for wanting to be down there every minute? I tried to tell her the youngsters would be out of mischief up here. She'd be doing a real service.

"Yes," she said, dry-lipped.

If the wind shifted, I told her, she'd better shut up shop and get the kids right home.

I guess it's kind of tough teaching history when nothing matters but what's happening to the man you love; or geography when the only place on the map for you is a bit of smoking forest. The kids were restless, too. At recess time, the sun was a queer red ball. By noon the wind had dropped and it was still as death. Through the smoke they could just see old Mrs. Chandler's house—where Timothy Lutz went to do chores until it was time to take the kids home.

Then, suddenly, the weather vane on the schoolhouse veered, and a gust caught up the grit in the yard and spun it into a cone.

Anne took a look, and I can pretty well guess what her first quick thought was—That now she had an excuse to let school out. She told the youngsters who lived nearby to get started right home, and report to their parents, and she sent Charlie Duckett running to fetch Timothy Lutz.

"Mis' Chandler says," Charlie reported, "that he's gone down to fight the fire. Didn't think he'd be needed until this afternoon."

Anne looked at the bus parked there. I guess it looked big as an elephant to her, and about as clumsy. She knew she wasn't any great shucks of a driver, but she told everybody to get in.

QUIETLY. No pushing. No shouting, please! She got the bus safely out on the highway. The smoke was drifting heavier all the time now. Hard to see. But the highway was empty. She seemed alone in the world, except for the children. You know where the viaduct is across the gully?

Well, as they got near, some of the kids started shouting: "Gee, Miss Anne—lookit! The trees are on fire!" She figured sparks had started new trouble in the dry bed of the gully, and that it was now or never. In a moment—a rather terrifying moment—they were by. In the clear again. "Everybody all right?" she rallied the kids.

And they went on—toward Smith's Mills. I've thought since that when she saw the man with the red flag, he must have seemed to her like a flaming angel outside Paradise. But it was just Sammy Steers. Little Joan Steers began jumping up and shouting, "Here I am, Daddy. Here I am, Daddy!"

"Hullo, Miss Anne," Sammy Steers said. He smiled at his kid. "You stop with Miss Anne, Joanie," he said. "She'll look after you all right. Where's Timothy Lutz?" he asked, and Anne told him. He nodded; then shook his head. "Bad business, this wind shiftin'," he told her. "It's no use tryin' to go on from here."

Ahead were men and trucks, and one rumbled into life. Where was that going?

"Smith's Mills," Sammy said. "But not with a cargo of kids."

She told him how it was behind. He whistled. Look, he wanted to know, was this fire the other side of the Route Road?

"Then you go back double quick," Sammy advised, "and take that. It ain't much of a road, but it'll detour you round to Shaw's Settlement." Once there, he said, they could stop safely till the worst was over, and he would himself send word to Smith's Mills by the truck to save folk from worrying.

Then Sammy took a look at her face and he saw how it was. He told me afterwards of the queer little smile she gave him and how it hurt him to see. "Could you help me—turn—this tank?" she asked.

LITTLE he knew to what he was sending her. He watched until the smoke swallowed them up. It was coming thicker all the time. Billy Hall, sitting in front with Anne, said: "Gee, it makes you—almost scared—doesn't it?" And Anne said, "That's when a person has to begin to be brave, Billy."

It was better on the Route Road—at first. It was a road Anne knew. Could you wonder that Anne thought of Dr. Jim when they'd come here together to pick hepaticas in the spring, when it was here he'd told her he was "going to rob the teaching profession to provide a doctor with a wife."

And he had added, "That's grand larceny, all right. I only help bring kids into the world, but you have to teach 'em what adds up into living."

I don't know just how far they'd got before Billy said, "It's smoking up again, Miss Anne." Then she took stock and knew that Sammy Steers had been too sanguine.

There was only scrub timber in here, but plenty of dry underbrush, and it was like tinder. Billy was putting on a bit of a show, coughing a lot, and she said, "Must you do that, Billy? I don't think it helps."

And Billy said, "Well, gee, Miss Anne, even the ol' bus is coughing!" That was just about the time Anne had figured the depression ahead and to the left was Shaw's Pond. She'd never thought to check the gas, and Timothy was usually so dependable. His mind, no doubt, was on the fire,

She waded through the water toward that ledge of rock not his work. On the next little rise, the car coughed its last, and would have backed down if she hadn't put on the brakes.

"What'll we do now, Miss Anne?"

When you want to know anything, you ask Teacher. Teacher has all the answers.

That was when Anne had to get control of herself, and of her voice. Youngsters are quick to see. They'd all get out, Anne said, and play a game. They'd play soldiers, she said. And march. Billy in front, because hadn't he his mouth organ she'd had to take away during school?

"Jeepers, yes!" Billy cried.

I know all those kids. I can picture them marching through the smoke along that winding road. Claire Adams, dark and elfin. Honey Schutt, with her bright bobbing pigtales. Small Joanie Steers. Millicent Dane, old enough to have terrified eyes behind her heavy glasses. The Abousra twins, whose parents run a tourist camp: sallow, respectful Syrian boys, adoring "ticher." Catherine Jones, always in trouble with her arithmetic, but who surprised Miss Anne with bits of her own poetry and prose. Daniel Webster Smith, the meekest child who ever bore an imposing name. And Billy, of course. Strike up the band, Billy! What'll it be? John Brown's Body? Glory, glory, hallelujah... as we go marching on.

Smoke — and wind — and fear!
"Don't cry, Joanie dear. Listen to Billy's music. We're all soldiers and must march."

THE smoke hurt her, Joan said. And her legs wouldn't go.

"Just a bit further, dear. Keep marching, Billy. Never mind the music. Save your — breath. All good soldiers keep on marching until they're told to halt."

There were flames now — somewhere. You could hear the leap and crackle. There must be no giving way to panic. March. Don't run. Left wheel, Billy. Everybody down to that strip of beach. Halt. Steady, everybody. Sometimes a laugh is worth more than the silence they say is golden. Think how funny it is, children! Going into the water with all your clothes on. Something to tell your fathers and mothers when you get home, isn't it? When you — get home.

"Joan, dear, the water won't hurt you," Anne said. "I'll hold you tight. Look at Billy laughing."

There were things they must do, she said, when she gave the signal: Keep down — like this. Heads just above water. Like a game. Everybody playing. And wet handkerchiefs over noses — like this. And the boys' sweaters soaked and held above, like tents. "When, Miss Anne?"

She would tell them, she said. They must wait, now. Waiting for terror to come, I guess, is worse than when it strikes. You know then. They might try singing. Anne said. Never mind the smoke. So they sang:

"Little Sir Echo, how do you do?
Hello, hello!

Little Sir Echo will answer you —"

Children's voices carry. Farther even than the cries of birds flying in frightened circles, or the splashing of terrified creatures on the margins of Shaw's Pond. They sang "There's an Old Spinning Wheel in the Parlor" and "Onward, Christian Soldiers." They kept on singing until Miss Anne gave the signal.

Then the fire came to Shaw's Pond. When it had gone, the trees were blackened skeletons and all green things were charred.

I OFTEN think how Anne Warren must have felt when, after the fire had passed, after she was sure her charges were safe, young Billy cried out: "Miss Anne, Miss Anne — look over there!"... and she started wading through the water toward that ledge of rock the other side of Shaw's Pond. Wanting to believe, but not quite believing. Not daring to believe. Because miracles are for saints and mystics. Not for ordinary young people who teach children — or help bring them into the world.

When she reached the ledge of rock the water came to her breasts. She put out a hand and touched the man lying on the ledge. He looked at her like a man who'd come out of hell. He was blackened and burned and all in, but he managed a smile.

"Are you one of the angels I heard singing?" Doc wanted to know...

I know it doesn't always happen that way. But if you go to Shaw's Settlement or Smith's Mills, they'll tell you. Or ask Sammy Steers, who commandeered a truck and was first in on the heels of the fire that swept the Route Road that day. Sammy will tell you:

"There she was, thinkin' she was leavin' him, to do her duty by the kids. And it was the kids' singin' that saved him. If you'd been through what he had and wandered as far as he did, maybe you'd think you was hearin' angels."

"Anyway he kept goin' towards the sound — and got to Shaw's Pond." Sammy will tell you, as he told me, scratching the bristle on his chin: "People talk about it bein' a miracle. Shucks, I don't know. Maybe it was. But I reckon both of 'em had something inside — or it wouldn't have happened."

That's why I wanted to tell you about Anne Warren. And why I hope there are plenty like her. We may be needing them.

You know, I've a suspicion — maybe you have too — that victory is inside us, first of all.

The End

The dilemma of C. Edward Lasher

PITY THE PLIGHT OF C. Edward Lasher. His discomfort is the result of having said to himself: "I won't ask an agent to help me plan my life insurance program. I'll do it myself!"

What steps would he have to take... what knowledge must he acquire in order to give himself the service and advice he would ordinarily get from an agent?

► First, of course, it is necessary to consider his needs... determine how each of these needs, such as family protection, education of children, debt retirement, and so on, can best be met by life insurance. He could do this by analyzing, just as an agent would, how life insurance has met similar problems in thousands of other cases.

Then, he must study the various kinds of life insurance to see which are best suited to his personal and family requirements. He would learn that there are three basic types of life insurance—Whole Life, Endowment, and Term, each with features especially fitting it for certain purposes, and each more or less interchangeable with the others. He would learn that within these three basic types there are many different kinds of policies, each designed to help meet some specific situation.

► Which can contribute most to his family's security? Which will best meet his children's educational needs? Which will build him an adequate retirement income? How much is necessary? Maybe, by using the optional modes of settlement available under the various forms of life insurance, one particular policy answers all his problems.

So, he would want to study these methods of settlement. Also, before determining costs, it is necessary to find out the class of risk in which his occupation places him. He should study the various methods of premium payment to learn how he could most conveniently keep his life insurance in force.

► If Mr. Lasher did all these things, he might arrive, at length, at some answer to his personal problem. We think that the deeper he delved, the more likely he would be to seek some expert guidance as to the kind and amount of life insurance he should have... advice which requires the knowledge and experience of a trained life insurance agent.

CHORUS GIRL NO. 12

It was Carole Landis, who didn't know how to dance. But listen...

ONCE upon a time 12 pretty girls, about to dance in a movie, were waiting for their turn before the camera. They were grouped in a corner of the sound stage, practicing their dance. A man with a tray entered and called out:

"Candy bars!"

Eleven of the girls stopped dancing and hurried over to the man and bought candy bars and sat down to eat them. The twelfth girl kept on practicing.

Two men came along. One was the dance director, the other was the producer of the picture. The producer looked at the 11 girls, then heard the tapping of the other girl's dancing slippers.

"We'll use that one," he said, "for the solo dance."

"Oh, no," the director said, laughing, "she's just learning."

The producer said: "The part calls for ambition. She has it."

"You're the boss," the director said hopelessly.

"What's her name? Where'd she come from?" the producer asked.

The director looked puzzled. "I don't know," he said.

But I know, and if you'll sit quietly for a minute I'll tell you.

Carole Landis came from a Hollywood apartment, and she got on that particular sound stage because three men who were movie extras lived on the floor below.

Carole had ridden in the elevator with the three men several times before she finally spoke to them.

"Hello," was all she said the first time. They said hello. The next time she got in the elevator with them — the ice having been broken — she said, "Well, I see you're movie actors." She looked knowingly at their tan make-up.

"Just extras," they told her.

"If I could even be that," she said, "I'd be happy."

"You're pretty young to be wanting to get into the movies," one of the men said.

"I am not," Carole said.

"I'm seventeen and I came to Hollywood to be a movie actress and I'm going to be one if it takes me all the rest of my life."

Another one of the men said, "Could you dance, in a chorus?"

"Easy," Carole said.

"They're calling a lot of dancers to the studio today," he said. "If you want to come along, maybe you could sort of walk in with us, and take your place as one of the dancers, and nobody'd be the wiser."

So she went to the studio with them, and they got her in, and she found the dancers and took her place in the back row. The dance director had them all dance, and since Carole didn't know how to dance—she had fibbed a little—all she could do was watch the girl in front of her, and glance at those on either side, and try to do what they were doing.

After this had gone on awhile the dance director lined the girls up in a single row—there were about a hundred—and walked along in front of them, and 12 times he stopped, and each time he stopped he told one of the girls to step out of the rank. Among these was Carole. He then told all the rest of the girls to go home, and walked away.

This confused Miss Landis, who up to then had assumed that she and the 11 others had been given the gate. One of her colleagues set her right: they had been chosen.

She looked up the director. "See here," she said, "I can't dance. Except in a crowd. A big crowd."

By this time all the unchosen girls had left the studio. "Well," the director said, scratching his head, "you'll have to learn, that's all. I can't get all those girls back again."

She was put under a quick course of special instruction and she did pretty well, but still not as well as the others, so she kept practicing during every spare minute she could find, including the minute when the candy man came in. . .

Which brings us back to our starting place.

Big Break

AFTER a lot of extra-special practice she did the solo dance for the picture, which was called "Varsity Show." But if you happen to have seen "Varsity Show," you may recall that there was no solo dance in it. Here's why:

Sometimes in making a picture some of the scenes that are photographed are taken out of the story, for any one of a number of reasons. They took the solo dance out. But it just happened that Miss Landis took a bow with the other principals in the grand finale of the picture; so to explain her presence they had to reshoot some previous scenes and give her a few lines to speak in them.

That is to say, she now was an actress.

And also to say, Hollywood is a funny place.

It would be absurd to say that from this auspicious start Miss Landis went right on. She did not.

She had too many brains. What I mean is, Carole discovered two things: (1) that she didn't know how to act; (2) that she wanted to learn.

So she passed up the dancing contract that the big studio offered her and made her way to the smallest studio in town. She persuaded them, on the strength of her appearance in "Varsity Show," to give her a job in Westerns. In such pictures you don't get much chance to emulate Bette Davis, but you do go through a lot of motions before the camera, and you learn a great deal about the fundamentals of acting.

Rough Rider

WHEN she was not eating off the mantel—or riding the horse that was responsible—she was going to night school. She studied diction, dramatics, languages, and picked up some extra coin, between pictures, by modeling clothes. A chance to play the lead in "One Million, B.C.," a pantomime picture made by Hal Roach, came along in 1940. She got this, not because of her dramatic work, but through her modeling, which was about all she had to do in the picture.

A friend of mine was working in that picture and I went out to see him, and met Miss Landis. We watched her do one of the pantomime scenes. She was dressed in a leopard skin and looked nice in it. She is blond and pretty and looks nice in almost anything.

"What's the matter?" I said. "Can't you talk?"

She laughed. "You bet. I can talk," she said. "Wait and see."

I waited and saw. She was given a contract by Mr. Roach and played in a few pictures for him, and did well. Half of her contract was bought from Roach by Twentieth Century-Fox, and this studio is grooming her for stardom in the major leagues. She played increasingly well in "Moon Over Miami," "Dance Hall," "Cadet Girl," and "Hot Spot." Now she is playing in "My Gal Sal," featured with Victor Mature and Rita Hayworth.

Future plans for her are large, and she seems ready to live up to them. She still is working her head off, both on the set and in her spare time, and Hollywood has given her the nod. Maybe it's all because she's always remembered what that first producer said when he saw her practicing her dance steps: "The part calls for ambition."

Sensational New Guide Book Brings Startling Proof You Pay Too Much For VITAMINS

Explains in Simple Language What They Are—What They May Do for You—and How You May Cut Costs Almost in Half

If you are a user of vitamins, or if you plan to take vitamins, the chances are 99 out of a hundred that you will profit by reading this sensational new VITAMIN GUIDE BOOK. Vitamins, the greatest forward step in nutrition in a hundred years, are one of the most discussed subjects in America today. But, unfortunately, the public has been hopelessly confused. Not one person in ten is able to speak intelligently about vitamins. Millions of people have been taking them largely on faith. It's about time that all this mystery and confusion be clarified. Most people are intelligent, want to be informed, discriminating. Why not, then, get the facts? You may be shocked to learn you have been paying almost twice as much for vitamins as you should have paid.

In just 20 minutes of actual reading time you can get an education on vitamins that you cannot afford to miss. Many mistaken notions that you may have had about vitamins will be thrown into the discard, but you will learn just what they may or may not do for you. You will know how to appraise vitamin values intelligently, and this is going to save you a lot of money. Forget the mistaken belief that "high price" means "quality." From now on there need be no complaint about high vitamin costs.

Here are some of the questions about vitamins which may have perplexed you and which are now answered. Do you know the VITAL test of "quality" in vitamins is "correct unitage"? Do you know how to appraise the value of a given vitamin product by reading the label? Do you know what are the "minimum daily requirements" for all the vitamins? Which and how much of each you need? Have vitamins any proven merit in the correction of graying or thinning hair? If you are troubled with indigestion, constipation, nervousness, poor skin, to what extent may vitamins be of value? Can you expect vitamins to keep you from looking and feeling older than you really are? Do competent authorities say there is such a thing as an anti-sterility vitamin, or that vitamins have anything to do with sex?

What Readers Say

"You have removed the mystery surrounding Vitamins and have made it possible for the layman to understand what he is getting for his money."

Mr. D. C. W., New York.
"It is the next best thing to taking a course in the study of Vitamins."

Mr. J. R. B., Chicago.
"Thanks for the Vitamin Book. I'm tired of being the victim of high prices for something that is so badly needed."

R. D. H., Lyme, Conn.

It is such questions as these and many others which have puzzled thousands of people that are answered in the most informative book on vitamins that has ever been written. Do you know who they are?

THE ladies and gentlemen pictured on this page are not a desperate band of bank robbers. They're not even hiding from the installment collector. They're merely dodging the cameraman so that nobody will be able to guess who they are. It's a challenge, folks! Start guessing! (The answers are at the bottom of the page.)

FORWARD MARCH! I been lookin' up the month of March in the almanac an' you may like to hear what I found out.

First off, until the calendar was changed 190 years ago March was the first month of the year. Up till nine years ago March was when we put in a new president or retreaded the old one. It's still the month when the government calls on all the national banks for a statement of their condition. An' while we're on the subject, the Govt. would like to know, on March 15, how you came out last year in the money dept., also.

The Navajo Indians call March the "Month of Little Hail," while Uncle

Sam just shortens it to "Shower down, big boy!"

March marks the beginnin' of spring, which means there is the same amount of daylight as there is dark all over the world, no matter what your clock says, or what you read in the papers.

Well, I told all this to Bumps Rafferty, my Irish truck-drivin' friend, an' he paid no attention to all my learnin'.

"Ain't you left out somethin'?" Bumps asks.

"Oh, there was some more, but I forget," I tells him.

"Humph!" Bumps snorts at me. "There's only one day in March worth rememberin', an' you must be born of ignorant parents to overlook it!"

"You wouldn't mean Bock Beer Day on the sixteenth?" I guesses.

"No, you big dumbbell. I would mean the sixteenth—Saint Patrick's—or your almanac is a fake!" Bumps roared.

"Ain't you left out somethin'?" Bumps asks

THERE GOES JOE COLLEGE!

Our Home Front reporter visits a university where pacifism once flourished. It's different now

CHAPEL HILL, N. C. "Attention! Forward M-HARCH."

Four hundred pairs of feet hit the turf in rhythmic cadence. Four hundred University of North Carolina students swung across the field. They had no guns, no uniforms. Gym shirts and khaki pants predominated. But the young faces were intent. No grinning, no fooling. The Carolina Volunteer Training Corps was on the march. It was serious business.

"I think it would be a safe guess," said the faculty member beside me, "that half of these students could have been counted as convinced pacifists a year ago."

Remember all the viewing-with-alarm the last few years about the pallid attitude of college students? Their "Keep Us Out of War" meetings? Their fiery declarations that youth wouldn't fight any more wars?

The University of North Carolina was one of the hotbeds of that student pacifism. The "Daily Tar Heel," student newspaper, was an all-out champion of isolationism and pacifism. To have suggested compulsory military training would have meant trouble. Just before Pearl Harbor, a turnout of students cheered isolationist Senator Nye to the echo.

They're not fooling — not since Dec. 7th. (W. G. stands for the college's Charles T. Woollen Gym)

And here they were marching. "One - Two - Three - Four. One - Two - Three - Four. Battalion HALT!"

TRAINING STARTED a few days after Pearl Harbor. That event, of course, electrified the university, just as it did the whole country. Campus leaders — many of them had led the peace demonstrations — began trying frantically to get something going to support the war effort.

But it was a sophomore named Henry Wisebram who brought matters to a head. Henry went to see one of the deans. "Look," he said, "this is war. Why can't we have military training?" And he had a plan.

Almost overnight, the C.V.T.C. was born. Students flocked to join it.

The training is a lot more than just hay-foot, straw-foot stuff. The university agreed to make courses in military science and background part of the regular curriculum. Faculty members with military experience — teachers of English, French, geology and other things — give the courses in addition to their regular work. A retired Army officer, Lieutenant Colonel William A. Raborg, who was living at Chapel Hill, volunteered to help, and was signed up as commandant — without pay. Henry Wisebram is Cadet Adjutant. Other students with previous military training are the officers and drill masters.

"This is no scheme to get out of Army service," Henry Wisebram warned me. "Just the opposite. It is pre-service training. The Army doesn't have anything to do with it, officially. It's not an R.O.T.C. unit. We aren't promised any commissions or any special treatment. We just want to be doing something to get ready."

Pacifists? Well, not just now.

MANY WAR ACTIVITIES besides the C.V.T.C. are now occupying the university. Two hundred students are training in the Naval R.O.T.C. Forty are learning to become pilots at the university airport, one of the biggest in the country. Co-eds are learning to do Red Cross work and to repair cars. Speed-up schedules are in force, to enable students to finish their education and become available for war service.

Special courses, of wartime value, are drawing heavy attendance. Japanese, for instance. But don't get the idea that the 34 students studying it are preparing to talk with conquerors. The first sentence the class learned to say was: "Watakushi domo no sinhei wa Nihon-jin no sensuitei wo shuzumieta." Which means: "Our sailors have sunk a Japanese ship."

Truman Hobbs, president of the student body here, is a son of Congressman Hobbs of Texas. The Congressman has stood consistently for a strong foreign policy and military power to back it up. Truman was long on the other side of the fence. He told me why — and why he changed.

"It seemed to me," he said, "as I studied history and philosophy, that people had always been fighting wars without any clear or true idea of what they were fighting for. I thought we were heading into the same thing all over again. But finally I began to see — even before Pearl Harbor — that this was a new kind of a situation. A world revolution. Instead of nothing important being at stake, everything was. So I had to change my mind about what we should do about it."

I wonder if that doesn't explain a lot of college students all over the country.

"Anyway," said the editor of the "Daily Tar Heel," "you can mark this war as the end of Joe College. You know, the fellow who was only in college to knock the girls dead, drive an automobile, and get tight. He's done, and he won't come back."

GOOD RIDDANCE! Certainly if this campus is typical — and I'm sure it is — the average college student today is a pretty serious-minded lad. He isn't being swept off his feet by war hysteria. Instead, he is accepting the challenge of war and trying to fit himself into the country's war effort.

I ended my visit by sitting in on an old-fashioned dormitory bull session. The subject: "What are we fighting for, and how can we make sure we get it?" It was the first time in years that I had heard anybody rattle off Wilson's Fourteen Points from memory. I remarked as much to the youth who accomplished the feat. He shrugged away the compliment. "Naturally," he said, "we've all looked that up. If we're going to win this war — and the peace — it would be stupid not to know the mistakes you made in the last one, wouldn't it?"

I nodded. Humbly.

Flags of the United Nations

THE BRAVE ARRAY of banners on our cover represents, in the words of Secretary of State Cordell Hull, "the greatest common war effort in history." Every government whose flag appears is a signatory to the Declaration by United Nations. Each is pledged by that Declaration to war relentlessly, with all its resources, against the Axis—and to make no separate peace.

The epochal agreement which 26 nations signed at Washington on New Year's Day contained only five brief paragraphs, but in them is embodied the determination of all mankind for Freedom, and a potent promise of Victory.

For these flags represent two thirds of the earth's population, more than two thirds of its economic power and fighting potential. They represent a possible military mobilization of 163,887,000 men, against only 28,560,000 that the Axis could muster.

Below is a list of the 26 United Nations, keyed to the cover diagram above. Learn to recognize all the battle flags of Freedom! — ROBERT N. COOL

"We're not satisfied — take them back where they came from!"

for Sparkling MORNING FRESHNESS

Do This at Bedtime Tonight

IF YOU awaken feeling and looking tired and listless—if you seem to be "aging" too rapidly, losing freshness and sparkle in the stress of these strenuous days—here is important news.

Today, modern science is reporting startling discoveries about food. About new-found, almost-magic food elements—with power to revitalize millions of the tired, the nervous or under par, and build them up for clear-eyed morning freshness and vigorous, buoyant days.

As you may have read in recent magazines, these new-found food elements are so important that governments throughout the world are changing national diets to include more of them. Warring nations feed them to their armies, to build up physical stamina and sound nerves. Deny them to their captive people, to sap physical resistance and undermine morale.

Already here in America our own government is seeking ways to supply more of these elements. For government studies show that 2 out of every 3 Americans aren't sure of getting enough of these vital food-factors to be at their best.

What To Do

In light of these new discoveries, thousands are taking a cup of new, improved Ovaltine each night and morning. For Ovaltine is a scientific food-concentrate designed to do two important things.

First: Taken warm at bedtime, Ovaltine fosters sound sleep—without drugs.

Second: To build vitality while you sleep, Ovaltine supplies a wider variety and wealth of valuable food elements than any single natural food. More than merely a "vitamin carrier," it provides not just two—or four—or six—but eleven important food elements, including vitamins and minerals frequently deficient in ordinary foods. It supplies significant amounts of Vitamins A, B₁, D and G—protecting minerals—complete proteins.

So—for clear-eyed morning freshness and more vital, buoyant days—turn to the new, improved Ovaltine, starting tonight. See if you don't begin to look and feel far more "alive" and sparkling—with new zest for life.

RABBIT OUT OF A

Hat

Joie was all washed up — his "magic" act was corny. Then he went on for the last time . . .

by Louise Baker

Illustrated by Carl Setterberg

JOIE didn't even try to fool Elva, and he couldn't fool himself. He was through. The act was "corny." That's what they called it. He knew he'd never be booked again. His name — "Mantelo, the Marvelous" — had been printed smaller and smaller on the billboards and nearer the bottom on the listing. Now it was to disappear completely.

"Who gives a damn whether or not you can pull a rabbit out of a hat? That was funny when Noah entertained the animals in the ark — but it's corny now. It stinks!" That's what Max Fortner had said, and when Max Fortner quit booking you, you were through. Theatrical people didn't sink lower than Max. Max was bottom.

Mantelo wouldn't even have gone to the theater that night except that they still owed him his pay. Three days they owed him. He'd have to go through with it again — for the money. And tonight there would be no rabbit to pull out of the hat. There would be no beautiful blonde either to put in the casket and cut in half — to the jeers of his audience. His father had taught him the tricks when he was a boy. "Never go through a performance without the rabbit act, Joie. It's a sure-fire winner!" That's what his father had said and he had never gone through one without it. But tonight there would be no rabbit.

Tonight the white rabbit — "Gardenia," they called her — lay on the bed under the frail, feverish hands of Mantelo's daughter, Birdie. "She wants to keep the rabbit with her," Elva had whispered. "Oh, Joie, could you get along without the rabbit and without me? I can't leave her. It's 104 now — her temperature. The doctor said —"

Mantelo interrupted her. "Honey, neither you nor the rabbit can help me now anyway. It doesn't matter. I only wish I could stay with her too, but you know — the pay —"

"Yes, dear, you must go through with it," his wife said.

Mantelo leaned over and kissed the hot little cheek of the child. Then he kissed the weary, cosmetic-worn face of his wife, who had been "the beautiful blonde" in his act all through the years.

AS MANTELO laid out the equipment on his table, his hands trembled. Three days pay — four, counting tonight — then no more. What would he do? There was the life insurance, of course. He could borrow on it, but if he borrowed, how would he pay back? If Elva and the kid could cash in on it now — Yes, that was better, that was the only way. . . His nimble fingers felt too heavy for his hands as he arranged his trick deck, his disappearing boxes, his magic wand. There was no magic now to save him.

Lola and Lester, the trapeze performers, spoke to him. They knew, of course. "How's Birdie?" was all they could say. Lester patted his shoulder. Joie turned his face away.

Flossie, the washed-up opera singer, came over too. "Listen, Joie," she said. "My Uncle Beck has a farm in Illinois and you and Elva and Birdie might like to go out there to fatten Birdie up before you come back for the fall bookings." They all knew and were trying to make things easy for him. Pretending he'd book in the fall!

Even the two Brighties — the little blonde tap dancer and her black-haired partner — spoke to him. "Hiya, Joie — give 'em the works, fella," the boy said.

"Sure, sure," said Mantelo.

"Where's the rabbit? Where's Gardenia?" the blonde asked. "I want to pet her."

Mantelo couldn't answer, but it didn't matter. The two young dancers were off together, whispering excitedly to each other. They were on the way up. Their names were getting bigger and bigger on the billboards and listed higher. Already they'd been noticed by important eyes. They were just marking time until the end of their contract to rise to real lights. "Spencer's out there," Mantelo heard the boy say. "Boy! Give, babe, plenty. This means but everything. Spencer! Get it?"

"SPENCER," Mantelo thought, "the top booker in the business." Well, it didn't matter anyway, because Mantelo was finished. His feet would feel the stage beneath them for the last time tonight. And tomorrow night — perhaps his feet would feel the earth beneath them for the last time . . .

"Mantelo!" It was his call. His card was out. The drums rolled, as they always had. Mantelo ran onto the stage. For the first time in all his years as a performer, he tripped and sprawled beside his table. He pulled himself up and for a moment felt hot tears of defeat in his eyes. Then he forced his lips into the contour of a smile and bowed stiffly. The audience rocked with laughter.

Ignoring the ridicule, he pulled out his aged deck of cards. That strange heaviness was still in his hands, but he flipped the cards about as best he could, racing his tongue through his usual patter. "And so, ladies and gentlemen, where is the ace?" With that, he reached to the center of the pack to draw out the designated card. The entire pack fell from his shaking hands — aces showered about him. The audience screamed their jeers.

Mantelo was an old trouper. He hadn't suffered from stage fright since those first childhood appearances when he had carried the great red-satin-lined cape for Tario, the Magician — his father. But tonight, strange fearfulness added its weight to the burden already heavy on his heart. He went through his act like a child with a well-memorized recitation.

"Hiya, Joie—give 'em the works, fella," the boy said

He didn't know what he was saying, but it was all so familiar, he couldn't forget his lines—even when the laughter threatened to drown out his chatter.

He realized by what unconscious rote he was working when he found himself half-way through the rabbit act. "You can see, my friends, that this is merely a gentleman's opera hat. How, indeed, you ask, could a rabbit be concealed within it?" He paused, and then placed the hat back on the table nervously. "How indeed!" he repeated. And there was nothing left to him but discouragement and the truth. "There isn't any rabbit," he said. "The rabbit—Gardenia her name is—is home in bed—"

THE audience really howled then, and as Mantelo made his last exit he heard applause—applause such as his ears had never known before, even when his name was in big bold type near the top of the billboard.

In his dressing room, he gathered together his things. He'd take them home for Birdie. Birdie could do all the tricks, and loved them.

They were magic still to Birdie.

The loud knock on his door startled him. "Come in," he said. He had never before met the man who entered, but he knew who he was. Every hooper, every crooner, every performer from Broadway to Hollywood who had ever pawed a copy of Variety knew Spencer.

"Mantelo—you are magnificent!" he said. "I am ready to pay you $500 tonight for an option, and if you stop in at my office tomorrow we'll discuss a contract. Glory! I thought the day of magicians was over, but I swear, man, that was the most masterful burlesque I ever saw in my life. You're wonderful! Why? I never saw anything more corny in the corn belt. It's simply a wow! Here."

Spencer thrust a handful of bills at Mantelo.

Mantelo couldn't lift his hand. He just stood and stared. "The rabbit—" he finally stammered. "The rabbit—"

"Yeah—the rabbit! You're right! The rabbit act is a sure-fire winner! Maybe we can raise my offer a bit when we sit down to talk it over. Okay? And you'll be around tomorrow?"

"Yes—" said Mantelo. "Yes—I'll be around tomorrow."

Shortages won't hit your hair-do if you use these dodges

3. HAIR-PIN SHORTAGE? Spike your curls with toothpicks. You'll look more bristling, but ringlets speared with tiny sticks comb out in the same professional-looking curls.

1. NO HAIR UNTURNED: Brushing is best way to keep your hair in condition, rout flakes that pass for dandruff, and to spread on a mirror-like sheen that won't wash off.

4. VANISHING PERMANENT? If Uncle Sam says "no" to a new one, get out your old linen rags, and wind. For nice results, have rag-strips and hair-strings of uniform size.

2. KEEP IT CLEAN! Wrap on and take off three turbans of foamy suds. A liquid soapless has a conditioner in it to make a mop soft, silky and more responsive to whims.

5. SOIGNEE COIFFURE. This is the kind you can whip up with either rags or toothpicks. So, is there any reason why you shouldn't bow gracefully to shortages?

WHAT'S THE VERDICT?

Can You Deduct It?

WHEN YOU FILE your income tax next week, don't forget that Uncle Sam allows you to charge off certain kinds of damage. What are they? See below: ↓

1. When Mr. Hanson's weathercock was stolen in 1939 he was pleased to learn its value could be deducted.

2. In 1940 he was still more pleased to find that he could deduct the cost of repairing his house when a boiler explosion wrecked one end of it.

3. Then, in 1941, a storm-blown oak struck the chimney, dropping a brick on his head. Can the unlucky Mr. Hanson deduct hospital expenses?

DECISION: No. But the cost of repairing the chimney is deductible.

When it comes to fire, theft, storms and similar misfortunes, Uncle Sam gives you a break on March 15 as to property damage. Should your pipes freeze or an earthquake scramble your chinaware, you also take those losses off under item 14 (form 1040). When your car skids on a too-icy pavement you enter the repair bill on the same line. These are "casualties." But expenses resulting from personal injury are out!

If you have an accident in your car you can deduct the cost of repairing the fender—but not your broken bones. You may also enter the value of an auto stolen or destroyed by fire, as well as demolished in a collision. The value of trees blown down in a hurricane may be deducted.

Your loss—remember, you should have proof—is not the original cost but the present value. Do not deduct any losses that are covered by insurance.

Here's the recipe of Mrs. Arthur B. Woods
by Grace Turner

ONE of the U. S. Treasury's hardest-working volunteer promoters of Defense-Bond sales, is Mrs. Arthur B. Woods, great-granddaughter of Alexander Hamilton, first Secretary of the Treasury. A tall, willowy, golden-brown woman, with chestnut-colored hair and searching brown eyes, Mrs. Woods can do many things well—run her house, work for the Treasury Department, and take an active part in our War relief and defense programs. She is also an excellent example of how to be a wartime hostess, with a preference for very simple menus and spontaneous entertaining in her historic Georgetown house.

"There couldn't be a more interesting place than Washington is now," Mrs. Woods says. Nearby her, in charming houses with gardens at the rear and the fronts opening on old-fashioned, brick-paved streets, live some of Washington's most important or interesting people—justices of Supreme Court, the Librarian of Congress, members of the State Department. The Woods house is a haven where they can come in informally.

"We're all ages," Mrs. Woods says. "We don't segregate the young people from the older ones. There may very probably be a number of people staying for dinner, when one of the boys turns up unexpectedly with his friends."

Two of Mrs. Woods's boys are in the service, John the oldest being an ensign flier in the Navy while Alexander, the youngest, enlisted some months back in the Army Medical Corps. The middle boy Leonard, a senior at Dartmouth, and fourteen-year-old Carolie, are in school. The girl is the artist of the family. "I like to watch her strong young hands at work," Mrs. Woods says, and points to an excellent head of one of the boys—sculptured by Carolie.

The Woods house is old and interesting. "And I love to have people here who like old houses," Mrs. Woods says. "This house was built in 1780 by a Scotch tobacco merchant.

It stayed in the same family for 133 years, being added to from time to time. About 30 years ago it was sold to Lincoln's son, Robert Todd Lincoln—and was always referred to after that as the 'Lincoln house.' When we bought it from the Lincoln estate, we restored the lines of the original house, opening up fireplaces that had been bricked in, replacing partitions that had been torn down."

In connection with the house, Mrs. Woods demonstrates her practical organizing ability. Money is not so plentiful in her household nowadays and she has turned a west wing, built by Lincoln's daughter, into a separate house—but you would not suspect it. The old coach house was also turned into a separate house. And both have been satisfactorily rented.

THE RECIPES which she gave us, Mrs. Woods says, are nothing special except that they are great favorites among the household and guests.

These recipes are not everyday ones, however, being inclined to the luxury side; but they are exceptionally delicious. The cheese soup for six, which in some sections of the country would cost fifty-three cents, can be combined with a fruit salad to make a complete and whole meal—and a very good one. In that case it becomes an economical luxury.

Twenty brownies, made by this recipe at an approximate cost of seventy-five cents, will keep splendidly. If you want to be a little extravagant for your boy at camp, try them: They will not deteriorate on the way.

The vegetable stuffing is unusual—costs thirty-three cents—but it is more wholesome than all-bread stuffing because the vegetables contribute special vitamins and minerals. Mrs. Woods uses it for turkey; but we have cut the recipe in half, in the thought that our readers would find it more practical as a stuffing for chicken.

CHEESE SOUP

½ cup grated carrots
1 quart chicken stock or bouillon
½ pound sharp American cheese, grated
Salt and pepper
½ cup light cream

Add carrots to stock and heat. Add grated cheese and stir over low heat until smooth. Season to taste. Just before serving, add cream. Approximate yield: 6 portions.

GLAZED BROWNIES

4 squares (4 oz.) unsweetened chocolate
1 cup butter
2 cups sugar
3 eggs, beaten
¼ teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup broken nutmeats
1 cup sifted flour
½ cup sifted confectioner's sugar
2 tablespoons lemon juice
1 tablespoon boiling water

Melt chocolate and butter together over hot water. Remove from heat. Add sugar, eggs, salt, vanilla and nutmeats; mix well. Add flour gradually, mixing well. Bake in greased square pan in moderate oven (350° F.) 45-50 minutes. Mix confectioner's sugar, lemon juice and boiling water until smooth; spread on brownies while warm. Cut in squares. Approximate yield: 20 brownies.

VEGETABLE STUFFING FOR POULTRY

½ bunch celery
1 green pepper
3 carrots
½ pound green beans
3 tablespoons bacon fat
2 cups soft bread crumbs
1½ teaspoons salt
½ teaspoon paprika
1½ teaspoons poultry seasoning
½ teaspoon pepper

Put all vegetables through food chopper, using next to finest knife. Cook onions, celery and green peppers in bacon fat until soft but not brown; remove from heat. Add carrots, green beans, bread crumbs and seasonings; mix well. Approximate yield: enough stuffing for 6-pound chicken.

How MARY MARRIED

A church ceremony and all the "fixings"—on only 3 days' notice!

by Emily Post

Author of "Etiquette, The Blue Book of Social Usage"

IN ANSWER to the war-time brides who tell me that real wedding plans cannot be made in so short a time as a week, I'd like to describe a lovely wedding. Church service, reception, trousseau, and all—it was planned and carried through on a very modest budget within the space of one weekend—and 30 miles from any big city at that! The story is this: Friday afternoon, Long Distance located Mary at my country house. John—her fiance stationed in the South—had been given a week's leave and would arrive in his car on Sunday. He suggested getting married at once and spending their honeymoon driving back to camp. A number of other brides were living at an inn near camp and he had already spoken for a room for Mary.

"How wonderful," I said. "You could be married Monday!"

Her gladness flared up, then dimmed. "I've always wanted a real wedding."

"But of course! Why not?"

"With Saturday a half day—and nothing to be done on Sunday?"

"Nonsense!" I said. "In Main-town, Saturday is a long shopping day and by Sunday you'll have finished. So off you go in the morning!"

I knew she had been sewing as well as saving for sometime and I had promised long ago to give her her wedding dress. Also, she had the luck to be a model size 14, and moreover, her idea of a trousseau was a supplement to the things she already had, and not the unreasonable one that every item must be new! So we made a list and she went home.

Later she telephoned me that the wedding would be on Monday at 3 so they could leave on the 4:30 train. She asked about the invitations. They couldn't be printed, or engraved, nor had she time to write notes.

Invitations Phoned

I suggested that her mother and she mark the names of her own and the family's friends in the telephone book that evening; and then cut the pages loose and divide them among a few relatives and intimate friends who would thus share the work of telephoning: "Mary has asked me to tell you that she is to be married on Monday at 3 at the Old Brick Church. She wants you to come to the ceremony and to the house afterwards."

Her parents' house had big rooms; so the invitations to the church would also include invitations to the house. A few night telegrams to John's family in the South, and distant relatives explained the reason for the sudden wedding. Those near were invited to come; those at a distance were told how much they would be missed.

The one day's shopping was strenuous, but very satisfactory. As for her wedding dress—it was an amazing tribute to modern manufacturers. Never anywhere have I seen a more beautiful one. The material looked like the pure silk grosgrain of yesterday, that was said to "stand alone."

A Simple Dress

THE dress was severely simple, beautifully cut, and exactly suited her. Her veil, a circle of tulle, was held in place with orange blossoms. The evident costliness of her dress puzzled me so much that at the reception I asked her: "Whose dress are you wearing? You could never have got it with what I gave you!"

She laughed with delight. "You not only gave this, but three other dresses too!"

And now, very briefly, the other items of preparation:

The organ was played by a friend. The decorations were sheafs of dahlias from the gardens of several neighbors who each donated one or two white ones cut off at the ground. Four were tied to the ends of the first and fifth pews. The others were placed about the chancel. Since the bridegroom's family and friends were far away—as at many other military weddings—the bride's brother was best man; and there were no ushers.

Two girl friends of Mary's stood at the foot of the aisle and with the help of a short list, told those who were to sit in the pews between the flowers. The other guests were asked to sit this side of the flowers.

The only refreshments at the reception were a wedding cake made by the baker on Saturday and fruit punch made at home on Monday. In other words, the two days allowed plenty of time to get ready to be married—and this despite the handicap of a rather long drive to the city and back again. Moreover, on Sunday afternoon when John arrived, Mary could devote her attention to him and to their friends.

On Monday morning—setting aside the superstition that it is good luck for the bridegroom not to see his bride on their wedding day until just before the ceremony—Mary and John spent the morning arranging the presents which, to Mary's surprise, had poured in—many on Saturday, a few on Sunday, some on Monday. Many, of course, came after she had gone—but that is another story.
